5 Missing Words
Changes Meaning
In Weill Article

In the article describing Leo Weill's recent trip to Europe, the wrong impression was given about people in Salzburg, Austria, as three descriptive words were left out. The sentence should have read:

"At Salzburg I stopped for a short time, and going out of the train, I saw the first victims of the war. Hundreds of displaced persons were sitting outside the depot waiting for a train to go to a camp. When I saw these people looking like frightened dogs, nothing on their bodies but an old suit and their baggage in an old sack."

The Mountaineer regrets the words "first victims of the war" were left out of the paragraph.
