THE IMPRESSIVE looking Mary Frances Stamey Memorial infirmary, pictured above, is nearing completion on the campus of Brevard college. Dedication of the new building, scheduled in every detail, was held Saturday. Costing more than $30,000, the infirmary is being erected in honor of Miss Mary Frances Stamey, former student at the college here who died in 1940 after service in the air corps. "He did an afternoon dress for me a while back," Miss Drake said. "I put it on and suggested that it would look much better without so much padding in the shoulders.

"So we took out the padding. Then I suggested it would look better if we shortened the skirt. So we shortened the skirt.

"After that it looked okay to me. And Bill thought it was still his dress."

Wife Even Tells Fashion Designer What Is Just What

HOLLYWOOD (UP) — It could be a real battle when a fashion designer and his wife don't agree about her clothes. But petite, pert and pretty Dona Drake knows who always wins.

"The wife, of course," she said. "She just has to be a little diplomatic about it."

Miss Drake is playing the role of a night club photographer in "The Girl From Jones Beach" at the Warner studio. Her husband, Bill Travilla, is the Warner designer who styled the movie clothes for Miss Drake and Virginia Mayo.

As in most families, Miss Drake's and Travilla's biggest clothes arguments are about the new look. In their family, though, it's the husband who likes it and the wife who doesn't.

"Bill is sold on the new look," Miss Drake said. "but I don't think it's at all suitable for me because I'm so small." (She's an even five feet and weighs 100 pounds.)

"I don't think most other women look good in it, either. You've got to have exactly the right kind of figure for long skirts and box shoulders. I saw a woman the other day who looked just like a football player."

"When Bill designs something for me, he does it on a much more moderate style, of course."

This, ladies, is Miss Drake's technique for getting her husband to like clothes the way she does. It

Jack Carson Talks With Hands, And Finds It Expensive

HOLLYWOOD (UP) — Jack Carson is no magician, but some pretty spectacular things happen when he waves his hand.

"I've got to learn," he said, "to keep my hands in my pocket and talk in facts and figures instead of sweeping generalities. Otherwise I can wave goodbye to my money."

Carson realized what his hand-waving habit was leading to when he came home from work on "My Dream Is Yours," his Michael Curtiz movie at Warner Bros.

Carson had asked for a sofa. He waved a hand expressively to indicate how big he wanted it.

"There, in his combination playhouse and guesthouse, sat the divan. It was in a vast semi-circle like the wave of Carson's arm, and it measured 30 feet from arm to arm.

"I wanted it big," Carson said, "but I wanted to be able to see from one end to the other."

Playhouse Not Little
What was to have been a little playhouse came about the same way. After Carson waved his arm, the floor area turned out to be 75 feet by 22 feet. He waved widely toward one end of it and got a fireplace 17 feet across.

Once Carson wanted a retaining wall along the back of his two-acre Van Nuys hillside ranch. He found a contractor and instructed him: "Build something along there; concrete, make it sturdy.

"The concrete mixer ran for weeks and weeks," Carson said. "I thought those men were going to duplicate the Great Wall of China. My business manager gave me some astronomical figures of how many square feet they built, and the only time I believe him is when I look at the wall."

If he doesn't stop ordering with his hands, Carson doesn't know what will happen next.

"Suppose I wanted the frets by my house taken down and I waved my hand houseward," he worried. "I'd probably come home and find my house gone, too."
