Actors Are Going To Wear Badges Into Los Angeles

HOLLYWOOD (UP)—The next actors who venture into downtown Los Angeles are going to wear badges...

Van Heflin, making Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Act of Violence" on location near the city hall, was arrested and kept off the set...

Heflin, dressed for his role in the dramatic movie, was unshaven, disheveled, stained and dirty.

"A policeman took one look at me," said Heflin, "and figured I'd look better inside a patrol wagon."

That same night Kroeger, recently arrived from New York, took a break between scenes to sightsee in old Olvera Street.

"One of them thought my face was familiar," Kroeger said. "He said I looked like one of the 'wanted' photographs back at headquarters."

"But I was lucky," he said. "The driver had seen me in 'The Iron Curtain.'"

"I'm just glad that by a chance in a million I had turned my gun back to the prop man. If I had that, I'd still be explaining at headquarters."

The movie ran into more trouble when it moved down to the Santa Fe freight yards for scenes with a moving train.

The guard was on alone, and he refused to leave his post unguarded while he went to check on Wright's admission.

That decided the question. From now on, location companies wear badges.

SMOKE SCREEN FAILS

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (UP)—A quahaug dredger used a naval battle tactic, a smoke screen, trying to elude a state fish and game patrol boat.

Pumpkins have been cultivated for thousands of years, for finds shed zig-zagged behind the smoke have been found in the Swiss lake dwellings.

Shooting Ranges Yield Fortune in Lead

CLEVELAND (UP)—A storage battery company here is getting lead from some unusual "mines".

The company reports that "pay dirt" in the form of shotgun pellets is being struck in trap and skeet ranges throughout the country.

At Kansas City, for instance Russ Elliott estimates that more than 200 tons of lead are obtainable on the grounds of his shooting park.

At the current price of 15 cents a pound, Elliott's lead is worth $80,000.

University Expert Exposes Popular Disease Theories

A number of popular theories concerning common diseases were exploded by Dr. G. McGavran, Dean of the University of North Carolina School of Public Health in an address before the Chapel Hill Public Health Society recently.

Contrary to popular belief, typhoid fever is now seldom a carrier disease. And not much typhoid comes from flies or milk, but from the feces of a mother and from milk that has been contaminated by her children, he said.

Discussing scarlet fever, he said that the fumigation plan is no longer considered worthwhile, and that quarantine, when it is necessary, can hardly be too strict.

The examination of food handlers by health departments is repeated often, but it is much in the case of the food handler for which the examination is most necessary, he said.
