Ava Gardner To Spend Vacation In North Carolina

BY GENE HANDSHAKER

HOLLYWOOD—Snapshots of the Stars:

Clifton Webb carrying a cane and looking faintly like a conceited seal in a freshman cap in "Mr. Belvedere Goes to College." In this followup to "Sitting Pretty," he plays a genius who completes four years of college in one. He sets not a household to rights (and in "S.P.") but a whole campus—gets the coeds to straighten their seams, etc.

Little Eddie Buzzell, "Neptune's Daughter" director, hugging Ricardo Montalban, tee-hee-to show Father Williams how he wanted her to do it. Nobody had to show Ricardo how to reciprocate.

Gregory Peck, camera bug, taking his own still pictures of casino sequences in "The Great Sinner." Vic Mature's wife caught the "one-day flu." She told Vic he was too tough to get it—that the bugs would succumb to him. But while he was telling me this, Vic doubled up and clutched at his tummy. He grabbed a telephone and called his Mrs. "I've got it, honey," he told her.

Definition of the average movie: a million-dollar means of getting two people in a clinch. You think 12-year-old Dean Stockwell hasn't grown up? The label on his "Secret Garden" dressing room reads, "Dean Stockwell," but, if you please, "Mr. Stockwell."

Louis B. Mayer, one of Hollywood's richest men, glumly watching a rehearsal and jingling the coins in his pockets. Preston Sturges directing "The Beautiful Blonde From Bashful Bend," reporting he has received six offers from publishers for the memoirs he hasn't yet started to write. The title: "The Events Leading Up to My Death."

Ava Gardner plans to spend Christmas with her three sisters and one brother in Smithfield, N. C. Getting that much news from Ava is something, what with still being on forever popping flash guns at her between scenes.

Julie Allison claiming on "The Stratton Story" set that she ate 15 Hershey chocolate bars in three days—and that they don't make her fat.

Woops! I don't feel so good. Wonder if it's Allison's chocolate or Mature's flu!
