Cabin On Jump River Not There Any More

LADYSMITH, Wis. (UPI)—Sheriff George Gibson is wondering about a little cabin that wasn't there.

He was asked to hunt for the 1924 foot structure when the owner, H. W. Risteen, Fayetteville, Ark., said he couldn't find it any more. It used to be located, Risteen said, about 20 miles east of here on the Jump River.

Risteen wants his cabin back so he can sell it. He had a prospective buyer but when the time came to close the deal, no cabin.

"It's whole thing was gone," the Arkansas traveler said, "even the brick chimney."

Fire Volunteer, Over 70, Still Answer Alarms

SALEM, Ore. (UPI)—Two volunteer firemen on the Salem force, both past 70, still are subject to call when a blaze breaks out.

Louis Smith, 75, and Louis Barnett, 72, say their combined service total 30 years. They contend they still can fight fires "with the same vim and vigor as a young whippersnapper."

Barnett says he joined the force because "they needed plenty of young men in those days."

"All equipment had to be hand-drawn then. We had about 40 men. These days it's different," he said.

Record Polio Costs Cited In March Of Dimes Appeal

The danger to family and community of polio epidemics was stressed today by A. P. Ledbetter, local March of Dimes chairman, who is leading this year's drive to raise funds for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

Pointing out that 1948 polio victims totaled around 26,000, approximately the number stricken in record year of 1916, Mr. Ledbetter said that one significant advance has been the modern care and treatment now available compared with that 30 years ago. He added, however, that the soaring costs of such treatment increased in proportion to costs of almost everything else.

"No matter what the cost," Mr. Ledbetter said, "the all-important factor is improved care of those who have been stricken. The long-range objective, of course, is the research which eventually will lead to elimination of polio itself. Those are the worthy reasons for our appeal to the community for liberal contributions to the March of Dimes."

Mr. Ledbetter recalled the 1916 polio epidemic which attacked an all-time record of more than 27,000 people. Fear and panic gripped the nation and railroads reported high sales of half-price tickets as families sought safety through flight from stricken areas.

The after-effects were also far worse than have been the case in epidemics of the last decade. Modern therapeutic care has saved many limbs which otherwise might have remained paralyzed by the effects of the dread disease.

Mr. Ledbetter stressed one more aspect of infantile paralysis and the importance of continued research into the various strains of virus which cause the disease.

"I refer to an address by Mr. Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis," Chairman Ledbetter said, "Mr. O'Connor declared that in spite of all our efforts of the past years, we cannot yet prevent the occurrence of a single case of polio."

Forest Hermit Lives In Crude Hut 20 Years

Seventy-two-year-old J. W. Williams (right) stands beside the crude hut in which he says he lived for 20 years deep in the woods near Fayetteville. With him is Rural Policeman David McNeill of Wade, who discovered the hermit in his shack. The former farmer from Alamance county, says he went into seclusion after the death of his wife. Between him and the policeman is the hermit's crude Christmas tree decorated with worn and faded greeting cards. (AP Photo.)

Former Local Resident Has 66 Art Exhibits On Display

Thomas C. Skinner spent his childhood in Waynesville painting the mountain scenery with his water-color set and since those days he has become one of the nation's outstanding painters both in oil and water-color.

Mr. Skinner came to Waynesville with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Skinner from Kentucky. His parents built Oak Park and lived there several years. His father, along with Captain Alden Howell organized the bank of Waynesville.

Thomas moved from Waynesville when his father retired and moved back to Kentucky. He studied art in New York and Paris and art officials tabbed him as a great prospective artist. His sister, the former Miss Elise Skinner, is the wife of Homer L. Ferguson, chairman of the board of directors and retired president of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock company.

Mr. Skinner has been staff artist of the Mariners' Museum for the past 18 years. At present he has on exhibition 66 pictures of maritime and shipbuilding scenes in the Museum at Newport News, Va.

In a recent editorial which appeared in the Newport News Daily Press the editor lauded Mr. Skinner's exhibition as a rewarding experience for anyone interested either in art or in the ways of the sea. The editor further said:

"Tom Skinner in this group of canvases has done more than create merely a set of advertising posters for the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, close to that yard as his work adheres. He has done more than make mere drawings of some of the navy's vessels, nor even in his high coloration has he merely gilded the shipyard and the warship. He has created some real art, and the more closely one examines line and color and integrated design the more one realizes it. It is good to know that there lives among us a man with the high creative talent he has demonstrated."

A number of his other paintings having to do with the ways of the shipbuilder and of the sailor have been hung in the museum for a number of years and several have been on display for quite a while in the offices of shipyard.
