DENVER-Vince Boryla, University of Denver center, plays with a losing basketball team but ranks among the highest scorers in the nation. That's quite a trick under any circumstances, It's especially surprising in Boryla's case, for he is one of the most feared-and most closely guarded-players in college basketball. Boryla gets the works whenever the ball is thrown in his direction. Vince's record made him a marked man from the beginning of his first season with Denver. As a freshman at Notre Dame, he broke the frish scoring record. During the war, the Army sent him to Lowry Field in Denver and while stationed here he played two seasons with the Denver Nugsets of the American Basketball League (AAU). Both years he was picked on the AAU All-America team. He also was chosen on the U. S. Olympic team, Boryla's pivot shot, equally accurate with the right or left hand, is one of the slickest maneuvers in basketball. At first the colleges al was an ed y 32 to 18 victory tried putting two men on him, but he sailed along at a 21-points-alab the Champion boys took a game clip. His best night so far was against St. John's in New York, when he scored 36.
