

Not Style Changes, '49 Spring Fashions

By BUNDSCHU

 New fabric may well be woman buys a new dress—and newly re-textures and colors the yard good—'49 Easter Parade the same as last year.

Fabric to tempt the eye, dress houses in space, the smooth flama and silk drapes so richly or coats.

Many of them are widely used, being back into its own no longer strictly for garden party wear but tidily tailored for any hour from noon on. Beside it is old-fashioned cotton mull, a soft, light weight and ladylike material for summer dresses.

Silk prints have new texture-like patterns rather than picture. Cottons, too, run to tone-on-tone or self-colored men's shirting weaves rather than contrasting patterns. Other cottons have been woven like tweeds and other weaves.

Fewer Gabardines
 New lightweight wool tweeds and smooth flat-weave wools appear for suits for the first time in years. In many cases dress designers have made their own fabrics with all-over ticking in squares, diamonds, and patterns.

Even hat makers have gone in for a new variety in material, with transparent nets and veerings, sheer chiffon, ordinary wrapping strong and a variety of dress fabrics standing out between the draw and tell.

The shadow of a 1949 dress is a bit less full in the skirt and a few inches longer than a 1948 one. But turn the light on its construction and there are some more evolutionary changes.

The first dress has almost all appeared from many different racks in favor of the kimono or rafter-shoulder. Favorite sleeve of most dress-makers is cut in one with the front and back bodice and sewed together as a continuation of the under-arm and shoulder seams.

The narrow waistline above the gathered skirt is also disappearing to a large extent in favor of a smoothly modeled middle that is belted loosely or not at all. The princess drape, with no waistline seam, is making a strong comeback.

Skirts Slimmer
 There is a little more squaring of the waist, but no increase in breadth in the women's suit. Skirts, however, well-tailored jackets are predominantly slim.

Coats, which were both flared and fitted last season, after the same choice this spring with an in-between straight and narrow coat also offered as a newly smart minority choice.

The stole, it appears, will hit a new high in popularity. Even the house dress manufacturers are turning them out to match their cotton gossamer dresses. They are shown with bathing suits, sun dresses and almost everything else.

The only point at which they appear to be diminishing is in the works of very high style dress-makers, who started them in the first place and don't like to be caught with anything so mass-production popular.

Milliners say there'll be fewer flowers on their hats this spring, but they've said that before and been voted down by their Easter-shopping customers. Whatever the state of the flower market, there are plenty of pretty shapes to choose from, still tilted to one side, still back from the hairline, with new side width and new variations on the cloche and bouffant and sailor.

Wooden Nickel Saver Has 350 So Far

ANAMOSA, Ia. (UPI)—Roy Lawrence has taken a lot of wooden nickels. He has a collection of 350.

Lawrence thinks it may be the biggest wooden nickel collection in the country.

Not all of Lawrence's wooden nickels are round. Many are in the shape of paper currency. Almost all are souvenirs of celebrations or anniversaries and were legal tender during the events for which they were printed.

Some are labeled "two wooden nickels" or "five wooden nickels."

The Chase National Bank, New York, which has a coin collection of its own, has bought wooden nickels from the Lawrence collection.

Attorney General Gives Opinions On State Laws

County commissioners don't have to resign just because they have turned in their resignations.

Attorney General Harry McMillan yesterday ruled in a direct opinion that county commissioners do not have to quit until their resignations have been accepted by the clerk of superior court.

They may withdraw their notices at any time before its "formal acceptance" by the clerk, the opinion explained, and once the notice is withdrawn they may continue in office.

Business Man Sees a New Era

By REM PRICE
AP New York Staff
GREENVILLE, S. C.—Some times Phil Hightower thinks he is living in a revolutionary era.

Certainly, he believes, the good and economic changes about him have taken place over the past two years too rapidly to be revolutionary.

Hightower, the owner of a 1,000-acre farm, who is preparing a book before in his 46 years as a small businessman, 1941 at all, says he is happy about it. His property is part of an upheaval, economic and social, which began about 1945 years ago and which has given tremendous impetus to the South.

But without the economic changes, he thinks, he would not have had to face what he calls the "Negro problem." The owner's quantity continues, which men throughout the South.

Industries have accelerated their movement southward. Many are in the farm belt. They bring outsiders—moon organizers and others with alien views.

Now 75 per cent of the South's farmers are landowners, an increase over the 15-year-old period of roughly 20 per cent. The number of sharecroppers in 13 southern states declined 94 per cent, amounting to 31.2 per cent of the Negroes in the 15 years.

The number of Negro farmers in the South dropped 24.4 per cent, while the number of white farmers dropped only 5.4 per cent. The eight-year period (1941-1948) of 2,000,000 people from the South, including around 700,000 Negroes, in Hightower's county, though.

In Hightower's county, thousands of Negroes left the farm and the South.

The movement began early, reached its highest point in 1941, in Hightower's county. Many Negro farm tenants, he said, began looking for high paid war jobs available in the cities around 1943. They drifted to the cities.

As the Negro left the farm, the white landowner left without the labor supply he always thought inexhaustible, was driven to mechanization. This population shift has left towns such as Greenville, S. C., where Hightower lives, with a steady stream of Negroes, but now many are forced to seek part-time work.

Hightower foresees a day when mass unemployment among Negroes will be a thing of the past.

He will place a tremendous bet on his little town's welfare in the next months. Hightower says, "I would like to see the Negro in the land—but their places have been taken by the machine."

Since the population of Hightower's county was divided two years ago, there are 2,442 Negroes and 2,442 whites in the county. There are 2,442 white families, but any other families, 29 Negro families. The number of land in farms decreased from 37,999 acres to 27,777, 1941.

There is a cultural trend in the South, he says, and today there is a white man's head than in the past.

Hightower has a total of about $100,000 in assets, 400 employees, and he has a good many "outsiders" in his county, mostly those who lived in north and south.

"I'm not going to live down here all my life to know," he said when his father died. "I'll live here all my life and hold public office most of the time. When they had his funeral he was laid out in state at the home. Hundreds of Negroes came to view his body and they gathered in the back yard, and white folks, of course, gathered in the front."

He said he believed the white folks, according to the Negro, Hightower's words.

It's kind of hard to define. There are a good many Negroes here who are a lot better than some white folks I know. There are three doctors, a dentist, an insurance man, and an auto dealer, for example, who are really white and I treat them as such, as someone else.

But when my children are in school, they went on, "I Hightower's worried, too, but the Negroes have had steady jobs but now many are forced to seek part-time work."
