(Continued from Page 1) cause I could almost read a person's face for character. Mrs. McCallum explained that the teacher's explanation and appraisal of her talents did not mean much, but she began to draw faces, and soon learned that she could correctly analyze a person's character. The painting of J. R. Boyd, which hangs in the bank, was painted by Mrs. McCallum. For her portraits she has won award after award, and these are as much in demand as her landscapes. Perhaps two things have impressed Mrs. McCallum here more than any others—the vast amount of colorful beauty in the mountains, and the number of people who have unusual talents for art. "I have found so many young people here who are really gifted, and with proper and sufficient training, can go a long way in the field of art," she explained. "I understand there are many in high school, as well as a number of adults here who are potentially excellent artists," she continued. Mrs. McCallum has hopes of building a large art class, and perhaps starting an art colony in Waynesville. Such groups have proven popular in Florida and California and attract many visitors who prefer to spend their vacation painting. "An established art colony here will be profitable from the start, because there is an unlimited number of scenes to always paint. The natural beauty of this inspires any artist and that is an important phase of the work," she pointed out. Mrs. McCallum has two adult both talented and enthusiastic. Mrs. Cross and Mrs. Lutz. Her temporary studio is the large room with lots of windows in the Cross home on Walnut street. She regrets there is a lack of northern windows, but that does not matter too much, she said, as she described tentative plans for a modern studio here. Mrs. McCallum is an interesting person to talk to, and you don't talk long before you are aware of the fact that she loves the better things of life, and about all appreciates the beauties of nature, which so many people take for granted. She inspires you, as well as makes you feel somewhat ashamed of overlooking so many beautiful scenes. The interview would have lasted longer, but her spring scene was needing her attention, since it and six other paintings were overdue on the market in Chicago. She is a busy and talented resident of Waynesville, and doing a good job in selling this section to the world with her paintings.

MORE ABOUT Parkway

(Continued from Page 1) Congress. The Waynesville Chamber of Commerce here Tuesday night led the way in the fight by passing a resolution supporting the action of the special committee of the N. C. Park Commission on this matter. Last year Rep. Redden got a special appropriation of $150,000 for construction work for the section of the Parkway from Black Camp Gap to Hintooga. The original estimate for this project was $357,000, but under present costs, Mr. Ray estimated that at least a half million would be required for the project. In discussing the Wagon Road Gap to Beech Gap, in Pisgah, Mr. Ray said it is estimated that at least a million will be required to pave the entire section, in addition to grading the remaining of the section between the two points. Mr. Ray said that likely he will recommend that the Park Commission ask for an increased appropriation for the Great Smoky Mountains Park for the next year except for increased road funds. The funds for 1949 are $473,449, and the 1950 $498,378. Of these appropriations, less than $50,000 is for physical improvements this year, with $108,000 set

MORE ABOUT Hereford Men

(Continued from Page 1) things from the cattlemen in this section. Mr. Swaffer also pointed out that breeding played an important part in the growth of the cattle industry, also proper feeding of the cattle, especially during the winter months. The proper way to raise beef cattle now, he stated, is to finish off the calf quick, in other words, put on the desired weight quick and sell the animal. The day of keeping a steer for two or three years has passed. Dr. L. M. Becton, veterinarian of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, assigned to Western North Carolina, made a few remarks about the dreaded Bang's disease. Haywood county is far from clean of the disease, and a number of growers have lost heavily in their herds. There are not enough veterinarians to do the job of culling out the diseased animals to make too much progress in getting a clean herd, but they are doing the best that is humanly possible. The doctor stated that trading and trafficking was the big reason for the disease spreading, but he had no suggestion as to how the growers were to stop this practice as quite a few cattlemen did not have sufficient feed to carry them over the winter, but had plenty of pasture in the spring, therefore they had to sell most of their cattle in the fall and purchase feeder cattle in the spring. A general discussion by all the members concluded the meeting.

Crime Causes Cited To Charlotte Club

CHARLOTTE (AP)—An FBI agent listed three factors he said were contributing to the present high crime rate. The speaker was Charles W. Brown, special agent in charge of the Charlotte FBI office. He told the Rotary Club that factors contributing to crime were: (1) Failure on the part of too many citizens to assume the responsibility of citizenship; (2) the juvenile delinquent of war years is becoming a hardened criminal of today, and (3) home life deteriorated and in too many instances homes are merely places of living and not places of learning. Brown said John Dillinger, the gangster slain in Chicago, was a tough man, but no tougher than today's criminal. In the last few years, he said, law enforcement officers have dealt with the most hardened men ever produced in the United States. Scientific detection and better laws, he said, have brought quicker ends to careers of present-day "tough guys."
