Japanese Weddings Become Plainer

TOKYO—(AP)—The fancy wedding, once the dream of every Japanese bride, is on the way out, another victim of inflation. "Matrimony halls," which have been doing a thriving business since the end of the war, are going broke one after another. These halls specialize in supplying everything needed for a dress-up wedding: priest, flowers, costumes, food, drink and a reception hall. One of the most famous that has quit business is the one at the Mitsukoshi department store. Others where as many as 300 couples were married during the first three months of 1948 have had as few as 40 customers thus far in 1949. The reason is expense. A year ago it was not uncommon for a wedding and reception to cost as much as 300,000 yen. That's more than $1,100 at the occupation exchange rate and more than $850 at the yen's actual value.
