Knows His Amendments After 11 Years' Study

TULSA, Okla. (U.P.)—A 61-year-old Battiesville, Okla., high school janitor is receiving acclaim today as the 44-year limitation to become a citizen of the United States.

George Stone, who came here from Poland in 1905, was the last to be sworn a citizen although the constitutional limitation has not actually been lifted. He said he never could remember the amendments to the Constitution. He took to memorizing them, too, and he filed another application for citizenship.

"Hearing Ear" Dog Aids When Telephone Rings

NEVADA, Mo. (U.P.)—And now, the "hearing ear" dog.

He is Ted, wire-haired terrier owned by Mrs. C. S. Townsend.

Mrs. Townsend is hard of hearing. She cannot hear the telephone ring without using a hearing aid, and the device bothers her.

But Ted hears the telephone, finds Mrs. Townsend and nudges her toward the instrument. Then she dons her hearing aid and carries on the conversation.

County Agent Makes Appointed Rounds — Even By Piggy Back

Riding piggy-back is a pastime not particularly suited to a 210-pound man. But D. W. Brady, Martin County's colored assistant farm agent will stoop—or rather climb—to this position when it's necessary to get to a farm family which needs help.

Brady, who is employed by the State College Extension Service reports that the piggy-back ride was only one of four means of transportation he had to use the other day to get to one farm. Frank Barber, who lives in a section of Martin County known as "the islands", had called for some information on swine production.

"The islands" is a rich farming section along the Roanoke River that is frequently isolated when the river floods and swamp waters rise. Despite the fact that spring rains had swollen the river, the assistant agent set out, traveling as far as possible by automobile. Then Barber met him with mule and cart and transported him across [illegible] water for about a mile. When he reached the deep swift [illegible] the pair abandoned the mule, the cart and proceeded another mile by boat.

Barber then tied the boat to a tree, doffed his hip boots and told Brady to get on his back. Brady climbed aboard, and a few minutes later they reached dry land.

Barber and his five sons raise tobacco, peanuts, corn and hogs. As a result of Brady's suggestions, they have purchased a purebred boar and are seeding a Ladino clover pasture.

Brady says that during a flood in 1940, all the Barber land was covered with water. They had to move the hogs out by boat.

About 70 per cent of the nation's farms are electrified today as compared with about 10 per cent in 1925, when the Rural Electrification Administration was set up.

The Morganton News-Herald

FROM CHARLESTON:

Haywood County Teaches

Of the beautiful counties in the world (much can we say "world"), The News and Courier counts Haywood in North Carolina among the best located and in that beyond Asheville, Waynesville that is the county town. The Mountaineer is published.

In Haywood county are 3,100 farm [illegible] and a "farm family" in the mountains of North Carolina is not a [illegible] a family of only two children and the father and mother. To them the "farm issue" of the Mountaineer, May 30, is dedicated, and in 62 pages it is promoting, pressing forward the farm program of the county.

The program is directed by thousands, not hundreds, of men and women in Haywood, and the farm [illegible] and the town families are making notable gains in the ways of good living.

Six separate sections of The Mountaineer are devoted to the basic industries of the farmers, beef cattle, dairy cattle, poultry, burley tobacco, forestry, vegetables and fruits.

While The News and Courier has pleasure in praising W. Curtis Hoey and Marion Bridges, who conduct The Mountaineer, for their service to the Haywood farmers, of which the issue is an admirable and striking evidence, it has another motive in what it is here saying. Their farm edition is a lesson to South Carolinians.

In South Carolina are 46 counties and, however there be in each and all of them many capable and enterprising farmers, the room is for more of them. Millions of acres here in South Carolina are undeveloped. In addition are the areas of worn and abused acres that can be reclaimed. In the counties improvement has been continuous and considerable in the recent years.

Quick and easy transportation make the lands for home available to men and women, though their work be in city offices. Every family should be a farm family, a land-owning and home-owning family.

Always will be and should be farmers whose calling is agriculture. Land is so abundant in South Carolina and getting about in the state so easy that weavers and salesmen, men and women in all the vocations, can have their own vines and figtrees!

And what a blest region for vines and figtrees is South Carolina!—The Charleston News and Courier

FROM TRYON:

Congratulations

Congratulations to the Waynesville Mountaineer on its 62-page special edition promoting the community development program of Haywood County. The newspaper portrays the progress of the county through its county agents, home demonstration clubs and various community leaders. Within four months the county's poultry programs jumped from 3,000 commercial broilers to 300,000. The beef cattle business brings in two million dollars to the county; the wood pulp business 8 million dollars; the fruits and vegetables $750,000; the dairy business $750,000; tobacco and other crops joined with various industries and tourists make Haywood a prosperous county. The organization of civic clubs, churches, bookmobiles, recreations and other cultural activities have enriched the county as a whole.

Marines Taught How To Land on Snakes

CAMP PENDLETON, Cal. (UP)—Marines ordinarily are not looking for snakes in the grass, but in case they run into some they're going to be able to recognize them.

A course in identifying types of snakes has been added to the regular training of Leathernecks here.

Eric C. Hindoriff, professional hunter employed by the federal government, delivered a large number of rattlers to the camp and instructed selected Marines in how to spot them and treat them. They, in turn, will instruct the men in the field.
