REV. E. H. BLACKARD

2 Noted Pastors Heard At Lake: To Preach Tuesday

The Rev. Dr. Wade Weldon, of Henderson, Ky., and Embree H. Blackard, of Gastonia, were featured preachers Sunday at 11 a.m. and 8 p.m., respectively, speaking under the auspices of the Lake Junaluska Assembly.

Dr. Blackard, who flew to Berlin on one of the Airlift planes to attend the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam, also got into Poland and spent some time in Prague. His sermon theme Sunday night was "The Challenge of the World Council of Churches." Dr. Blackard will speak again from the auditorium platform Monday night, and Dr. Weldon is programmed for a second address on Tuesday night.

"Does It Matter What We Believe?" was the theme of Dr. Weldon's sermon, Sunday morning. Declaring that true doctrine is the high objective of all Christian gospel, Dr. Weldon said that people are apt to say that it doesn't matter what one believes if he is only sincere as an argument for tolerance. "However," continued the speaker, "to accept such an idea is to fail in recognizing the difference between fact and fiction. It fails to see that belief is the determining factor of personality. It fails to recognize that many of the people to whom Jesus ministered acted right and were sincere, but did not believe the right ideas."

HANDY DEVICE INVENTED TO DETECT BAD AIR

SAN FRANCISCO (UP)—Small communities can track down the source of air pollution by using an inexpensive device developed for local mines.

A nudget impinger apparatus draws dirty air through an alcohol solution, which traps the dust and reveals its source.

Invented by the U. S. Bureau of Mines, the device was described to the national meeting of the American Chemical Society here.

contest, Miss Nancy Jane won over Zuniery Messer by eating her three crackers faster and then whistling when she was finished.

The next meeting was set for 8 p. m. July 14 at the Elizabeth Chapel Methodist Church.

Miss Massie Is Presented At Coronation

Miss Mary Ann Massie, representing the "province" of Haywood County, attended the Coronation Ceremony and Rhododendron Ball of the mythical kingdom of Rhododendron in Asheville Saturday night. Her marshal, were Charles Way and Wingate Hannah.

Miss Massie with five sponsors from other western North Carolina Counties was presented to Queen Jane Morrison and King James Hardy Lee following the coronation.

Preceding the coronation the wives of the officers of the Rhododendron Royal Brigade of Guards gave a tea for the sponsors, members of the court and their chaperons in the Billmore Forest Country Club. The brigade entertained with a reception and dinner party in the Battery Park Hotel.

Miss Massie's chaperons were her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Massie.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Shoul and young daughter, Betty, have returned to their home after a vacation trip to Myrtle Beach, S. C.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Hill and daughter, Mary Elizabeth, of Lowland, Tenn., were week end guests of Mrs. Hill's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Tom Stringfield.

Miss Louise Rotha, who is registrar and head of the Chemistry Department at St. Mary's Seminary in St. Mary's City, Maryland, is expected today for a visit to her mother, Mrs. Harry Rotha.

The Rev. B. N. Rogers of Battelle Cove is recovering from a recent illness.

Little Miss Carey Howell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Howell, Jr., is visiting relatives in York, South Carolina.

Buttonholes Are Good Guides In Buying Dresses

When shopping for a house dress take a good look at the buttonholes, advise clothing specialists. The dress will wear better and look better if buttonholes are well-made and tightly placed.

Some buttonhole features to look for are: An ample number of completely formed stitches, well-finished edges, and buttonholes made on a double thickness of the fabric and on the grain; the "straight" of the goods, all making for firmness and long wear. Buttonholes also should be evenly spaced and an even distance from edge to closing. Before buying a dress, check to be sure buttons and buttonholes are lined up together.

A recent study showed buttonhole defects were a common occurrence in 46 cotton house dresses examined. Of these dresses, 30 had from one to 10 defective buttonholes. The best buttonholes were not necessarily on the highest priced dresses. One dress at $2.94 had sturdy, well-placed buttonholes, while another dress costing $3.45 had faulty buttonholes.

A dress with one or two inferior buttonholes still may be a satisfactory purchase provided the defect can be corrected with needle and thread. For example, buttonholes with too few stitches can be strengthened by stitching over them by hand.

But a wise shopper won't buy a dress if buttonholes are badly off-grain, or if buttonholes are spaced uneven distances from the edge. She will also avoid a dress with buttonholes that run off the double thickness into single thickness of the material.

Household linens often wear out before their time from abuse rather than use. Instead of yanking sheets off the bed or the clothes line and running them into hamper or basket, save them by removing them carefully and folding neatly.

When preparing washing to send out, use a regular laundry bag instead of forcing soiled clothes into a pillow slip or tying them up in a sheet. When sheets and pillow slips are used as laundry bags they suffer from unnecessary wear, and often soil which may require more strenuous washing.

Soiled towels should never be used as cleaning rags to wipe up around bathroom or kitchen before they go into the wash.

Wheat Pest Attacked By Canadians

REGINA, Sask. (UP)—A never-ending battle is being fought on government experimental farms here and in other parts of western Canada against the wheat-destroying sawfly.

The fight has been going on for 12 years, and so far the sawfly has more than held his own. But the experts are hopeful that out of one of the tens of thousands of wheat hybrids now under test will come victory.

The sawfly attacks all common varieties of red spring wheat which have hollow stems. In 1947 it destroyed 7.4 per cent of the Saskatchewan wheat crop, or 17,550,000 bushels, worth about $26,000,000.

The tiny insect is hard to attack directly because it spends all but one or two weeks of the year in the wheat stem.

The adult fly bores a hole in the stem in summer and lays eggs in the plant. The eggs hatch into grubs, which eventually topple the plant by eating completely around the stem. Grubs spend the winter below ground inside the crown of the wheat plant. The next year they hatch into flies and the cycle repeats.

If the grubs hatch all at once, the sawflies might be poisoned by DDT or another insecticide. But the hatching period extends over several weeks, making the poison approach impractical.

So the next best thing is to try to develop a high quality wheat with solid stems. About 10 years ago an experimenter developed "rescue" wheat with a solid stem. It was sawfly-resistant and grown by farmers in southern Saskatchewan. But it had the low grade of three.

The experimenter's job now is to raise this quality and at the same time keep the wheat both sawfly and rust-resistant.

Men working on the project are confident that sooner or later they will come upon one variety of wheat that will fill the bill and their long fight against the sawfly will be over.
