MINNEAPOLIS (U.P.) - The average American consumer has slightly more real income this year than at the same time last year, largely because prices are going down.
The monthly survey by Investor-Diversified Services says real income each income in terms of prices is two per cent higher.
"Cash income increased from wages and salary payments are only slightly higher than they were in 1948 while other cash income is less, reflecting lower farm prices and consequent reduction in farm income," the survey said. "But investment income remains high."
