

MORE ABOUT Varied Reaction

(Continued from Page 1) had given each person samples of their Scott County Canned Foods. Bottles of cat-up, cans of pork and beans, and tomato juice bulged from under the arms of weary travelers as they lugged suitcases from the buses.

Mr. James Smith was particularly impressed with the cleanliness of the country roads and country church yards. "People here care a little more for their churches than we do at home," one of the farm group remarked.

Some of the folk admitted they had come along for a good time but not of them but a very definite purpose in mind.

Mrs. Mayne Cathey said she regretted she would have backed out at the last minute but last year she had promised her son, R. E. Jr., 10, that he would bring him on the tour this summer. "I want to make a farmer out of him any way I need a farmer," she smiled.

Miss Sally Mae Smathers, making her fifth farm tour is interested in the "historical things" she sees. With her was her twelve-year-old niece, Barbara, who was on her third tour. They help in her school work, she thinks.

The parents who didn't bring their children with them spent half the time wishing that Johnny or Mary could see this or that. "How much they would enjoy it!"

Mrs. Wayne Smathers, whose son, Wayne Jr., does a lot of horseback riding, couldn't help but think of him when she saw the long-legged horses in Kentucky pastures.

Mrs. Malcolm Crisp has two boys and a girl of 4-11 club age and would like to be able to bring them on something like this tour to interest them in things outside their own small community.

In the opinion of Mrs. Paul Ferguson, many more worthwhile things are seen on a tour of this type than you could possibly see on an outing in the family car, even for a longer vacation. She referred to the special programs and demonstrations offered at Purdue and to the strict, to private, no-trespassing

Mr. K. L. Lowe felt that the tour would be a good thing for the people here, not showing them a sample of real mountain square dancing.

Mr. Joe Morgan of Clyde was on the whole, glad to today of the trip, but did not let the tour her enjoyment of the entire tour.

Thelma Stotland, June Davis, Linda June Messer, and Mildred Bondurant were among the pretty girls who gave life and color to the picture.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall were seriously considering going into the turkey business, as they discussed the DeVault farm on their way home. "You wouldn't have to raise as many as 10,000 at once, I can see," Mr. Hall said.

T. Hugh Rogers was so enthusiastic over every place he visited that he moved to residence a dozen times within the week. The last word from him was that he'd settled for a home in Indiana—if he could move to Carabocher there.

The bus drivers brought their wives on the tour and were as enthusiastic as the farmers in viewing the crops and live-stock. Gordon Rhinehart and Mrs. Rhinehart had with them their daughter, Mrs. Ha White. Another of the drivers, Rubin Justice, was accompanied by Mrs. Justice.

Ray Worley of Route 1, Canton, had with him his son, Bobby Ray Worley.

Mr. R. F. Swaym, who was among the four women, wished she had brought her 14-year-old daughter, Louise, to see all the sights.

"I want to get back to some good drinking water," E. F. Burnette commented Saturday morning. He was ready to come home. Mrs. Burnette just had a good time.

Honey Comes In Jars—And A Dress

Crabtree Cannery Open Twice Weekly

B. F. Nesbitt, agriculture teacher at Crabtree-Iron Duff School, said today the Crabtree Cannery from now on would be open every Tuesday and Friday, opening each of these days at 7:30 a. m.

Mrs. Emma Cathey, remembering the words of the song, was impressed with the old homes in Kentucky and thought them the loveliest along the route. Her daughter, Rene, thought that the half of her two-weeks vacation spent on the tour was well worth while.

J. L. McElroy of Waynesville, like the other farmers was interested in tobacco and noticed that elsewhere rain had not damaged the crop as it had in Haywood.

Mr. and Mrs. Walker Brown were most impressed by the miles and miles of corn. Mr. Brown declared: "We're as good farmers as they—just don't have the land." Frank Sorrells agreed that the Indiana and Ohio corn is hard to beat.

Mrs. Dollie Ferguson, or Aunt Dollie as everybody calls her, was accompanied on the trip by her niece, Miss Lois Ferguson.

Horace Anderson of Clyde, who had been ill for some time previous to the trip, got along well and reported it was worth the effort he put out to go.

Miss Elizabeth Galloway and Mrs. Guy Messer were among the Waynesville group. They agreed with the others that everything went off perfectly.

R. L. Earl and Earl Hoglen are the latest of the four members, to be mentioned. Their reaction to what they saw on the trip is a definite one. "I don't know if I can live like an urbanite," one of them said.

The passengers on Red Rhinehart's bus compiled a list of statistics which they felt entitled them to special recognition. There's the only bus, they said, with a doctor, three women named Sally, and the only one who's driver brought his wife and daughter. This was the only bus with a passenger that slipped and fell in the bathtub while on the tour. The only one with a passenger that fell and broke her glasses; one that lost his glasses. It also had the distinction of carrying the man who took the most pictures (nobody reported more than the 300 he snapped). There's was the only bus that carried a man who had been lost at Purdue University's Union Building. It had the only two members who became aunts while they were on the tour. Miss Mary Medford and Mrs. Malcolm Crisp received word that their nieces were born—both on August 2. Miss Medford's niece, Patric Elizabeth, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald K. Robertson of Baltimore, Md. She is the former Anna Medford of Waynesville. We failed to learn any details about Mrs. Crisp's new relative.

Canton Pastor Resigns To Go To Mt. Holly

The Rev. D. O. Melms has resigned after four years service as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Canton.

He is now pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Mount Holly, near Charlotte.

After he went to work at Canton in August 1945, the church's attendance more than doubled, and 75 new members enrolled.

Mr. Melms took an active role in the Asheville Presbytery and is now a member of the Presbytery ministers commission, the executive committee on religious education, and chairman of youth work. He also was a leader in starting the Presbytery's summer camp at Camp Hope near Cruso for the youngsters of the churches in the jurisdiction.

He and his wife, a graduate of Queens College of Charlotte, were equally active in civic affairs, as well as church work.

Mr. Melms, who had served as secretary-treasurer of Canton's Civitan Club, also serves on the city's recreation commission.

Mrs. Melms, meanwhile, served three years as superintendent of the church's Sunday School primary department, two years as director of the vacation Bible school, and also worked as program chairman of the Canton Junior Woman's Club this past year.

Before going to Mount Holly, they planned to spend a vacation with their sons at Carolina Beach.

Workshop Opens For School Lunch Room Operators

Mrs. Billis Siler of Haywood and school lunchroom supervisors of two other counties were in Asheville today opening their 5-day long workshop for lunchroom workers.

Up to 200 school lunchroom operators, managers, and workers from Buncombe, Haywood and Henderson counties are studying demonstrations and hearing discussions by national and state specialists in regard to the handling of lunchrooms and the preparation of food for the school children.

Approximately 50 Haywood County representatives are attending the sessions.

Tomorrow, Dr. Clyde A. Erwin, state superintendent of public instruction, will discuss the principles of operating the lunchrooms.

There will be demonstrations on the use of dried milk, on bread-making, meat-cutting and the use of different cuts of meat, and on the preparation of fish.

Food specialists, dining hall experts, and sanitarians from the state offices at Raleigh, and from Chicago and Washington, will give the lectures and demonstrations at the meetings, which will continue through Friday at the Sand Hills School.
