Forestry Making Strides In North Carolina

Under direction of the Forestry Division of the State Department of Conservation and Development, tree culture and preservation are going forward in North Carolina. These pictures give you some idea of how the department carries out its program. Top: Employees operate one of the tree-planting machines owned by the department. It is drawn by an ordinary tractor. With the machine, two men can plant 10,000 seedlings in one day. This number of seedlings would reforest about 10 acres of barren land. Lower left: Workers cultivate tree seedlings at the department's Clayton forest nursery. Ten million seedlings are being raised there. Soon after frost, the seedlings will be lifted from their beds, graded, tied into bundles and shipped to forest landowners throughout the state. Lower right: One of the several heavy forest fire fighting units owned by the Forestry Division. The unit consists of a trailer truck, a crawler type tractor and a large disc plow. It is taken to large forest fires to plow fire lines for stopping advancing flames. (AP Photos).

Southern Gallantry Goes All The Way

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UP)—A guard at a Shelby County public building reached a new high in South'n gallantry. During repairs, the men's room was open. The women's wasn't. When an embarrassed woman approached, the elderly guard said: "Tell you what, lady. I'll go into the men's room and chase 'em out, and then you can go in and I'll stand guard for you."

Xmas Card Artists Vie For Rich Prize

NEW YORK (UP)—Nearly 5,000 American artists, some famed, many obscure, put their concepts of Christmas on canvas this summer to compete for a rich prize in the art world, the Hallmark Art Award.

Now, some 2,000 of the paintings have arrived in New York, coming from every state, Alaska, Hawaii and the Virgin Islands, and more are on the way. According to Vladimir Visson, director of the award, they represent almost every known art school and every style of painting.

The first-prize painting will bring its artist $2,000 plus a chance to compete for an additional $3,500 international prize and have his creation exhibited at the Wildenstein galleries here as well as at museums in Boston, Washington, Los Angeles and Kansas City.

California has contributed entries from 462 artists, Pennsylvania 304, New Jersey 244 and Illinois 194. Mr. Visson related. But New York City, whose artist population is second only to Paris in the world, turned in 1,070 entries.

In France, where a counterpart of the American contest was held earlier this year, 5,121 artists competed. The winner, Edouard Goerg, a 56-year-old Parisian expressionist, painted a representation of the Nativity. His painting will be pitted against the American winner here in December for the $3,500
