Further Proof Of Growth

This week workmen for the Town Water Department finished installing 350 feet of 6-inch water mains on Monty mery Street. with a fire hydrant included in the project,

The installation of the line and fire hydrant was the result of steady prowth of business places in that area. Within 13 months several business places—six to be exact-have started in that immediate area.

Many who travel the streets every day do not realize the steady provide of the business.

A fire hydrant is a good investment, especially in a crowded business area. The town, in our opinion, made a cood move in providing this one. We trust it will never be used.

The Slowpoke Menace

On this same subject, the Winston-Salem Journal points out editorially, the slowpoke found traffic piled up for about two miles. After about 35 minutes of trying to get to the head of the long line of traffic, he found a man just taking his time, although it was on Sunday afternoon, and the highway crowded with motorists. The driver was indignant when signaled off the highway, in order to let traffic proceed at a normal speed.

A number of recent motor accidents have been attributed to the inability of vehicles moving at fairly fast but usually not dancrous rates of speed to avoid collision with vehicles moving at a snail's pace through crowded areas.

Of course, every driver should be on the demon. But most operators of motor vehicles drive at a rate, we would say, of over 30 pales an hour. Many drive faster the larger part of the time, perhaps. Hence, something close to a standard rate of speed has been established, not so much by law as by averand driver practice.

Hence, the average driver in approaching another car has reason to believe that he can count on the other driver to move at a certain or "predictable" rate of speed. With this in mind, he hakes his calculations with resject to passing probabilities. Thus, when he encounters a slowpoke driver he is likely in some cases to be eaught off guard, with collision and possibly tragedy resulting.

MIRROR OF YOUR MIND.

Answer: It's impossible! No one can do anything except for a reason, even though he may have no idea what it is. To cry, as you suppose, "for no reason" simply means that you are grieving over something you do not dare to let yourself be aware of -as a woman might cry from the fear that her husband did not love her any longer and yet find the fear itself too apalling to face. Since we cannot control our unconscious feelings, there is little likelihood of curing oneself of this "weakness" without help unless its cause is

than life itself?"

Answer: There are people who claim to feel this way, and no doubt believe it. And of course it is far from uncommon for one person actually to give his life for another. I suggest, however, that what happens psychologically in

Are some of us more sensitive to pain than others?

Answer: We differ much less than we think, maintain Drs. G. Wolff and James D. Hardy on the basis of experiments with a "painmeter" which shows at just what strength a given sensation (heat from an electric bulb) is recognized as painful. Your "painthreshold" varies mainly with your age (you are less sensitive as you grow older) and the place where you are hurt. But for psychological reasons, "two people may react very differently to the same intensity of pain - what mainly matters is how much

FIVE FIGURES - When Edwin Gill former State Commissioner of Revenue, went with that Washington law firm, he knew what he was doing. The fact is he has a guaranteed salary running well above that of any State employee (Asst. Budget Director D. S. Coltrane draws $12,000), and will receive at the end of each year's operation a cut on the 12 months' operations. This should net him a little more all told, than Scott receives each year as Governor.

Funny thing: In a large percentage of the cases, men leaving State employment do much better financially in private work, but seldom
