Beauty Blooms In Leaf In This Scene From 1948 Festival

Miss Peggy Medford, Crabtree-Iron Duff queen is borne surrounded by tobacco leaves, by her community float in last year's Tobacco Harvest Festival parade. This float won second prize in the community division. This week there will be three queens and three floats in the place of this one. The organization of the county's Community Development Program made two communities of Crabtree (Upper and Lower).

LOTS OF FOOTBALL PLAYER
WATERTOWN, Mass. (AP) — The heaviest player in high school football in the nation this season probably is Joe Merullo. Weighing 310 pounds, Joe is a bulwark of Watertown High's forward wall.

One of the outstanding agricultural officials who will be guests at the Tobacco Festival this week is William S. Humphries, assistant editor of the State College Extension Service.

DR. R. W. CUMMINGS, associate director of the North Carolina Agricultural Experiment Station, will be one of the special guests at the Tobacco Festival this week.

GREAT GRANDMOTHER AT 54
OXFORD, Mass. (AP) — At the age of 54, Mrs. Ida Lowe is a great grandmother. Her 21-year-old granddaughter, Mrs. Barbara Jackson, has just given birth to a son.

Haywood Tobacco Farmers

Burley tobacco, in one respect is just like Carolina Power and Light Company, as both are helping make Haywood a more progressive county, and add materially to the economic welfare of its citizens.

Burley brings into the county approximately one million dollars each year. This money goes to 1,500 to 1,600 farmers, and is a sizable sum that adds much to their income.

Carolina Power and Light Company, besides spending thousands upon thousands each year in Haywood for taxes and payrolls, is constantly striving to improve services, and keep ahead of the power needs of the people. Evidence of this is the 66,000-volt line now nearing completion between Canton and the Hazelwood sub-station.

Yes, the burley crop, and Carolina Power & Light Company are among those things that are helping make Haywood a better place to live.
