Drive Started To Expand Journalism Dept. Of UNC

The chartering of a new corporation last week opened a movement to expand the University of North Carolina's journalism department into a School of Journalism.
 The new non-profit corporation, chartered by North Carolina Secretary of State, Thad Eure, is the Journalism Foundation of North Carolina, Inc.
 The Foundation of 110 charter members, including W. C. Russ, editor of the Mountaineer, immediately launched a campaign to raise $100,000 for an endowment to expand the journalism department into the proposed new school.
 Within a short time after the drive started, the first donors gave $1,000 each and the will of the late W. Carey Dowd, Jr., former Charlotte News published set aside more than $5,000 for the foundation.
 The new organization was initiated by the North Carolina Press Association.
 Its charter members are eminent publishers, radio executives, writers, and public officials both in and out of the state.
 The names include those of Senators Frank P. Graham and Clyde R. Hoey, Secretary of the Army Gordon Gray, who is publisher of the Winston-Salem Journal-Sentinel; and Washington Columnist Drew Pearson, among others.
 The North Carolina Press Association started the drive rolling with a contribution of $1,000 in honor of Miss Beatrice Cobb, publisher of the Morganton Herald.

APOLOGIES ARE OFFERED

In the article regarding the sale of Christmas Seals, this newspaper unknowingly failed to mention that Mrs. C. F. Kirkpatrick, a member of the committee, represents the Woman's Club.
 The organization is also sponsor of the sale of the seals.
 Apologies are offered for the omission of these facts.
 Connecticut, and Mrs. Andy Wasmuth of Dayton, Ohio; one son, Ned Turner, Jr., of Dayton, Ohio; and seven grandchildren.
 Further details were not available at noon today.
