Highway Commissioner L. Dale Thrash Names

39 To Study Rural Road Needs

Commissioner Of District, Thrash, Wants Group To Map Out Program

Thirty-nine Haywood men were named today as members of 13 township committees to help map plans for the rural road program in this county. L. Dale Thrash, highway commissioner of the 10th district, has notified each of the 39 men of their appointment, and at the same time outlined a plan for studying rural road needs in each of Haywood's 13 townships.

Mr. Thrash said that he appreciated the cooperation he was getting from the people. "They seem to realize the tremendous job to be done and understand that we cannot get to everybody's road first."

Mr. Thrash, together with highway engineers, came here several weeks ago and discussed the general rural road program, and pointed out his plans for putting crushed stone on all main roads where it was needed. About 200 attended the meeting.

In naming the committees to serve in Haywood, Mr. Thrash, in selecting the men, wrote each: "I would like for you to represent the 'Go Forward' road program in your township. As you know, this program is for all the people. I suggest that you hold public meetings, and let the people discuss roads of your township, recommend road locations changes, point out danger spots, and muddy places on school bus routes. Other matters that are necessary for the improvement of our road system should also be discussed."

Mr. Thrash also pointed out to each member that any road maintenance matters should be referred to Raymond McHaffey, county road foreman.

Another suggestion of Mr. Thrash, was that the people on each rural road give the road a definite name, and put up the name on posts at each end of the road. He also suggested that plans be made to paint all mail boxes and place the owner's name and box number on each one.

Mr. Thrash pointed out that his plans were to have all township committees, together with the county commissioners and others interested in rural roads, to meet with highway engineers and the (See Roads—Page 6)

18 Arrested By Local Policemen Last Weekend

Waynesville policemen arrested 18 people last week-end for traffic violations or drunkenness.

The police department called the count "a little high" for an average week-end.

All the defendants, out on bond, are scheduled for a hearing before Mayor J. H. Way in police court at 4 P. M. today.

Exactly half of the 18 are charged with public drunkenness, and the others either with drunk driving, passing a school bus, reckless driving, or having an improper muffler.

REPORTS ON NUCLEAR PROGRESS

RETIRING CHAIRMAN of the Atomic Energy Commission, David E. Lillenthal tells a press conference in Washington what is being done to speed up the atomic program. He said that Sen. Edwin C. People Giving Generously In Drive For Toys

Santa Claus will have a lot of extra work to do in Waynesville in a couple of weeks, and he can give the credit to the Waynesville people and their rural neighbors.

Shortly after Francis Massie of the Lions Club made the announcement about old toys, people started dropping by regularly with old but still usable toys their children had sacrificed so that other children would find their stockings well-filled Christmas morning.

Many left their contributions at Massie Department Store because of an error in the Mountaineer news item.

Many others, however, stopped by Massie Furniture Store, which is the correct headquarters in the toy-gathering campaign.

Sentelle Rites Are Set For Tuesday At 2:30

W. C. Dick Sentelle, 50, died Sunday at the home of his mother, Mrs. H. M. Sentelle, in Clyde, after a long illness.

Funeral services will be held in Clyde Baptist Church Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. with the Rev. D. D. Gross, pastor, officiating. Interment will be in Pleasant Hill Cemetery, Clyde.

Palbearers will be Edwin Finchler, Orville Haynes, Roy Cashion, Glenn Brown, Luther Snyder, V. H. Byers, Devoe Medford, and Roy Haynes. Members of the Truth Seekers Class of the Clyde Baptist Church will be in charge of flowers.

Mr. Sentelle was connected with the Lake Worth Herald in Lake Worth, Florida, for twenty-five years prior to his illness. He was an active member of the Lake Worth First Baptist Church and was chairman of the board of trustees at the time of his death. Before going to Florida, he was employed by the Champion Paper and Fibre Company in Canton.

The body will remain at Wells Funeral Home in Canton one hour before the funeral when it will be taken to the church to lie in state. Surviving are the widow, Mrs. (See Sentelle—Page 6)

Cherokee Feast Was Just What Name Implies - Only Thing Missing Was 'Space'

By BILL LINDAU

This particular pale face has been to many a white folks' feast and on for the last 32 years. club dinners, football banquets, inauguration dinners, and plain "weenie" roasts.

But yesterday's Cherokee Indian feast made the most sumptuous of these previous roasts look like something they used to throw through the bars to the pick pocket doing a stretch in a 12th Century dungeon.

In brief, the hosts didn't spare the carving knife or the tongs in their efforts to make the 400 guests feel welcome.

They gave it in quantities and variety. Nowhere else except possibly at a Haywood county community picnic or the snore-as-bard of Chicago's Palmer House, have I had my plate loaded with six different kinds of meat, more than a dozen different vegetables, about a dozen fruits, and seven kinds of bread.

Although I can match any living man, woman, child, or animal in a duel with a knife and a fork, I did have to pass up some of it.

Going down the cafeteria-style line, I decided to skip the ramparts since I had to go to work the next day, and passed up the pumpkin and seven kinds of fruit.

But I had records on roast beef, and did my best on all the rest of it to leave the hosts with a glow of satisfaction.

When I had finished a lady sitting next to me gazed at my plate with what I took to be an expression of profound respect.

"Why don't you lick it?" she murmured.

The only drawback to complete enjoyment of this dinner lay in the white folks' own sense of taste.

Most of the guests sampled each of the items on the menu, but a number of plates still showed much of the meal when the bear dance wound up the program.

However, it was our own fault. We just haven't been brought up right or something.

The average paleface eats his dinner with his fork in one hand, a salt shaker in the other, and black pepper, ketchup, Worcestershire sauce, and other spices within easy reach.

He uses a lot of salt and has high blood pressure.

The Cherokee uses no salt and has no high blood pressure.

Mystery Origin Of Cherokees Is Still Being Sought

Dr. Arthur Kelly, nationally prominent anthropologist, head of the University of Georgia archaeology department, said yesterday that further exploration and closer cooperation between investigators should help solve the mystery of the origin of the Cherokees.

He made the observation in his address to members of the North Carolina Archaeological Society, nationally prominent scientists, Indians, and private citizens at the second annual Cherokee Indian feast at the school in Cherokee Village.

In discussing the mystery of the Cherokees, he pointed out that they are racially different from other Southeastern U. S. tribes.

This difference is notable, he said, in the shape of the head.

Most Cherokees were long-headed, while most of the members of the other Southeastern tribes were round-headed.

Summing up previous research into the Cherokee origins, Dr. Kelly described them as essentially a mountain people whose culture reflects their adaptation, however, to the uplands, surrounded by tribes speaking different languages and having different cultural backgrounds.

"To the South and West," he continued, "were the various tribes belonging to the great Muskogean-speaking family.

"On the North were Algonkians and Iroquoian relatives, and to the Carolina seacoast was the enclave of the tribes that spoke the Sioux tongue.

"The presence of these detached Sioux-speaking tribes in the Southeast is itself almost as great a mystery as that of the Cherokee."

Analysis of Cherokee myths and customs, he pointed out, have led anthropologists generally to derive the Cherokee from the upper Mississippi or Ohio region northwest of their present territory.

In spite of what he termed considerable cultural influence from their nearest neighbors, the Sioux-speaking Catawbas and various groups of Creeks to the south and southwest, the core of Cherokee (See Mystery—Page 6)

Duplicate To 'Angel' Made Famous By Tom Wolfe In Green Hill Cemetery Here

The angel made famous by Thomas Wolfe's first novel "Look Homeward, Angel" is no longer lost.

For a time it appeared that the angel might be in Green Hill cemetery here, but now it appears that it is a "sister" to the one which Tom wrote about. The real angel was found in Oklahoma cemetery at Hendersonville. Although badly in need of a scrubbing, and with one hand missing it is other wise just as the author described it in his first novel and a short story, "An Angel On The Earth."

Over the years eight different angels have been pointed out as "the one" which so impressed the author as a child that he used it, description in his fictional stories. Positive identification has now been made by Miss Myra Champion, of the Reference Department of Pack Memorial Library, after months of extensive research. Also, she has been able to identify four—and possibly a fifth angel, which were once owned by Tom's father and which stood on the porch of the Wolfe shop at various times over a period of some 25 years.

"The Angel" marks the grave of Mrs. Margaret Bates Johnson, wife of the late Dr. H. F. Johnson, longtime president of Whitehall, and time president of Whitwell, both in Mississippi. It was purchased from Wolfe by the Johnson family when Tom was six years of age. It is made of Carrara marble, in one hand a stone lily "strife" in the other hand, the other hand is "raised in benediction," and it is possibly delicately upon the ball of one phalange toe.

The search for the angel which began with the assumption that there was only one, took the librarian over miles of Western North Carolina hills—through cemeteries, briars, and woods, through research into Tom's works, conversations with old-timers, Wolfe family, marble shop employees, cemetery sextons, descendants of families in whose lot the angels are standing, and correspondence with family or friends in distant places.

Facts brought to light through Miss Champion's efforts, indicate that Tom's father at one time purchased four or five angels from a school of sculpture in Italy—made by students who were supervised by the masters. Instead of the traditional "holes" to represent eyelids, all the Wolfe-owned angels had artfully chiseled eyes and lids, the same shape of the foot, the same lines of the face, the same arrangement of hair and ornaments. Two and a possible third are located in Riverside Cemetery here in Asheville and a fourth at Green Hill Cemetery at Waynesville.

More Humor And Understanding Is Need Of World, Says Local Pastor

"The world needs more humor and more sympathetic understanding for each other," Rev. M. R. Williamson told Rotarians here Friday as he discussed the "Pathways To Peace."

He paid tribute to the United Nations for their program, determination, and accomplishments for inaugurating a world-wide program among 55 nations destined to bring about a better understanding.

"There are some who criticize the United Nations but we must give the organization credit for starting out right and trying," the speaker said.

Rev. Mr. Williamson brought in low Rotary was working on a program of advancing a better understanding among the peoples of the world and also emphasizing the importance of sympathetic feeling for other peoples. "Right now we have about 100 D. P.'s in Haywood county. These people need our sympathetic understanding, as well as others all over the world."

"We need a spirit of cooperation among all peoples of the world, and this will grow as we cultivate the understanding and sympathetic feeling for them," he continued.

"Most of us are too serious," he pointed out, as he told a series of stories to illustrate his point. "It is important that we cultivate a sense of humor use it, and laugh along with our seriousness."

Twin Falls, Much Higher Than Niagara, Not Too Far From Here Needs Publicity

By ALDERMAN DUNCAN (IAP Newfeatures)

WALHALLA, S. C. — Twin waterfalls, each higher than Niagara, spill down Blue Ridge Mountain fastnesses along the North Carolina—South Carolina border but surprisingly few people ever view their beauty. Not many more people know they even exist.

The falls, described by a U. S. Forest Service official as "the most spectacular in the Appalachians," are secluded in a remote section not accessible to the average traveler.

The falls are on the White-water river, which flows from North Carolina's Nantahala National Forest into South Carolina's Keowee river. The upper falls are about one mile north of the state line. The lower falls, three miles down the White-water's steep rapids, are well inside this state and are included in the Gen. Pickens division of the Sumter National Forest.

Both falls are more than 100 feet higher than Niagara. Their exact height is not known but Forest Service contour maps show the lower falls to be approximately 280 feet high and the upper falls possibly may be higher. Niagara Falls' top height is 167 feet.

The lower falls may be reached by a one-quarter mile hike from a small lodge at the end of an abandoned road, or trail, leading from a paved highway about 10 miles away. The upper falls are reached by a mountain road from Cashiers in Jackson County.

LOWER FALLS of the White-water. Taller than Niagara.

Besides being hard to reach, the (See Twin Falls—Page 6)

Mildred Medford To Report Special News Of Schools

Mildred Medford, a senior at Waynesville high school, will do some special features about school activities for The Mountaineer. She will cover school events from all schools in the county and plans to begin a column about students in the near future.

Miss Medford has gotten a special "Voice of the People" from students for Thursday's paper. A highly controversial question was asked.
