Kids Reform
Film Papas
In Life

HOLLYWOOD (UP) — In the mansions of the new, noble Hollywood, does Papa come home from a hard day before the cameras, light up a marijuana cigarette and set out for a 10-round brawl at Ciro's?

No. He plants himself in front of the fireside and spends the evening with the Encyclopedia Britannica. Reading it, too. A fellow earns more things that way.

Since this appears even duller than the way the unglamorous half spends its evenings, we called for an explanation from Burt Lancaster, who is up to the "D's", De-bussy to Dermatitis.

"I want to be able to answer my kids' questions," said Lancaster. "I can't let them think their old man is just a dumb movie star."

When William, now age 2, digs up a sand crab at the beach and says, "What's this?" Lancaster will be ready to reply:

"That is a decapod, a member of the order of malacostracous crustaceans in which the fourth to eighth pairs of thoracic appendages form uniramous walking limbs."

If a Lancaster daughter should run home from play crying, "Tell me all about the decapods," her mother can take her up in her arms and murmur:

"It was a Greek federation of cities east of the River Jordan."

"I want our children to ask us for the answers when problems arise," Lancaster said. "It's up to my wife and me to have the knowledge with which to reply."

The Lancasters sometimes vary their evening's reading of the encyclopedia with Grimm's fairy tales.

When he gets around to telling them to his children, he says, he'll put all the acting into them he put into the swaggering costume drama "The Hawk and the Arrow" he made at Warners.

"It'll be a toss-up," he grinned, "which of us will enjoy them more."

Versatile Table Eases
Problems of Invalid

SAN DIEGO, Cal. (UP)—When Daniel C. Robbins was confined to bed for several months he had trouble reaching all the things he wanted.

So Robbins designed what he calls the "utilitable."

It is a handsome, sturdy piece of furniture which acts as a table and will raise to fit any hospital bed and lower to any couch. All three of its handy shelves can be used at the same time and the top, equipped with a mirror for shaving or primping, tilts to any angle.

The unit can be dismantled in a minute, folded and packed in a case.

ten years.

During 1949, the Home received 13 patients from Haywood county—eight from Canton, two from Clyde, the rest from Waynesville.

These patients were treated a total of 905 days.

The cost of treating them for 398 days was $15 per day—a total of $1,090.

Keeps Slim

Her Poodle

HOLLYWOOD (UP) — Ellen Drew is a lovely lady who never gets farther from her easy chair than the closest box of chocolates.

Exercise, Miss Drew believes, is unlovely and also downright dangerous.

Movie stars who ride saddle horses get charley-horses. Stars who ski break legs. Stars who play tennis collapse from exhaustion.

But who ever got hurt in an easy chair?

Miss Drew believes that nothing keeps a woman so soft, so cuddlesome, so helplessly feminine as no exercise.

"In my first picture," she said, "I played opposite Bing Crosby and he complained that I bruised him in the clinches. He said I was too strong for a woman."

Too Much Exercise
"Other stars who have been exercising meanwhile," she said sagely, "are now taking exercises to get rid of the muscles they got from taking exercises."

Instead of romping off for a game of golf or a brisk set of tennis on her days off from her last picture, "Stars in My Crown," Miss Drew sat in her easy chair and thought, occasionally, about exercise.

"After a few hours," she said, "I'd find myself panting with exhaustion."

Next day, she propped up the

N. C. State Men To Head New Weed Section
5 New Chemicals To Aid
In Fight Against Weeds

SIoux FALLS, S. D. (UP)—American agriculture learned of two major developments of great importance to its future at a meeting here of the north central weed control conference.

One is a plan of the U. S. Agriculture Department to establish a new weed division. The other is the development of five new chemicals which experts say will "open up a new field of weed control."

It has been estimated weeds are responsible for an annual reduction in American farm production of 10 per cent. Their damage is exceeded only by that of soil erosion.

New Division Planned
Dr. R. M. Salter, chief of the bureau of plant industry at Beltsville, Md., announced plans for a new weed division.

Salter said he will appoint Dr. Roy Lovgren of North Carolina State College to head the new weed division.

The five new chemicals are selective herbicides. That is, they select their prey and leave other plants unharmed. Dr. L. M. Stahler of South Dakota Agricultural College, who announced their development, said the time is coming when specific chemicals will be used on weeds in each particular crop. The new chemicals are a step in that direction, he said.

Cost to Be Low
The chemicals, which have highly technical names, are not yet ready for market because of a need for further experimentation but Stahler said when they do go on sale, it will be at a relatively low cost to the farmer. Smaller quantities will be needed per acre than are needed with chemicals now in use.

Speakers at the conference emphasized one major theme: the need for more uniform weed control laws among the various states. They cautioned farmers not to be led astray by the spectacular developments in chemical warfare on plants, such as the war-time development of 2,4-D, at the cost of regular good farming practices.

Proper cultivation, they said in effect, is the base on which weed control rests.
