Washington Officials Have 'Sweet Tooth' For Special Kinds Of Cakes

WASHINGTON—The last thing the Raymond Hollands want to see on their own dinner table is a cake. Cake is their business.

Mr. Holland bakes cakes all day every day for senators and other diners in the Senate restaurant on Capitol Hill. Mrs. Holland decorates cakes for the Pentagon Bakery shop, which she also manages. Her patrons range from char women to top military brass.

Sometimes, "the little one," as her husband calls his petite brunette wife, "dolls up" as many as 100 cakes a day with fancy, pastel-colored icing in the shape of flowers and what she calls "lovely" greetings. Once she had an order to trace out a love letter in chocolate on a cake. "Men," she told me, "have more of a sweet tooth, or at least are not watching their figures like us gals."

Mrs. Holland, the daughter of a grocer, was born in Delavan, Ill., but met her husband when the family moved to Dallas, Tex. She got a job in one of Raymond Holland's two bakery shops about 10 years ago. He taught her how to decorate cakes, finally married her. She ran the shops for a while when Raymond was drafted and sent to Fort Sill, Okla., to do all the pastry work and baking at the reception center.

After the war the Hollands came to Washington. As pastry chef on the Senate side of the capitol, Mr. Holland has made quite a reputation for himself as a baker of devil's food and angel food cakes, ruin and apple pies, ginger muffins and corn bread.

His devil's food cake is as popular as the restaurant's famed bean soup, and is a "must," along with the corn bread and apple pie on every day's menu. Not only does Mr. Holland bake for diners at the restaurant, he's forever whipping up special orders for luncheons "upstairs" in the Vandenberg Room, where senators honor visiting dignitaries.

Mr. Holland got into the baking business because he liked to cook. "I couldn't keep away from a bakery when I was a kid. Finally I got myself a job in one." Soon he was helping the pastry chef. He started with Danish pastry then "went on to cakes and cookies."

He gets his funds from the family and feeling obligated to scrimp because she accepts their generosity.

Being independent certainly is an easier and happier way for a woman to grow old gracefully.
