which were once powerful but are now dead.

As an example of what the European nations could do for cooperation, he cited the example of the Benelux countries.

These countries—Belgium, The Netherlands, and Luxembourg—he pointed out, formed an agreement in 1946 to eliminate tariffs between their respective countries so there could be free trade.

Mr. Williamson said this union, a trade agreement which is still functioning, was a step in the right direction.

"Though it is strictly an economic union," he declared, "it is an example of what could be done on a much larger scale on a political basis by the rest of the small European countries."

MORE ABOUT Sidelights

his best days of hunting were still ahead of him, and the world was strangely full of interesting sounds and smells that demanded investigation.

The man stopped suddenly, and swung up the gun, before the old dog caught the scent, as the bird fled suddenly upward out of the bush 30 yards ahead of them by the cold-running stream.

The gun roared once, and the figure hung still in the bright air, then plunged abruptly downward and struck the water.

The old dog saw the stream and the bird on it, floating slowly downward. Even when he was a puppy, he wouldn't have plunged into that stream in January, and nobody would have blamed him. The air was cold and the water was cold.

Things were different now. He was ten years old and the man knew it, and that's why he was out here today.

Instantly, he sprang away, while the silver spray of the splash on the stream still hung in the air.

He plunged into the cold water, and swam downward to the bird. Grasping it firmly but gently in his teeth, he turned and struck out for the bank.

The water was cold, and the old dog shivered as he labored.

Then suddenly he stopped and froze into a dead point.

The hunter called but the old dog didn't move. Only the sound of the icy stream swirling around his still haunches broke the quiet.

Then he saw him, and bounded over as the covey broke through the brush.

The gun roared twice, and three fell.

Only then did the old dog move. The hunter watched them, and then he waded shivering through the cold water.

They stood there, man and dog, for a silent moment, and then the man rubbed the old head.

"We better get on home, old man," he murmured.

"We can get some more tomorrow."

The old dog trotted beside the man ignoring the cold wind knifing against his wet coat.

Every now and then he'd look up at the man.

But he didn't look anxious any more.

central epidemic emergency account, on behalf of chapters whose resources had been wiped out. From May through August of last year, chapters were drawing $1,000,000 a month from the epidemic aid fund.

Patient care, Mr. Johnson emphasized, is but one phase of the fight against polio. The March of Dimes' most important job is to support scientific research aimed at finding a preventive or cure for polio, and to underwrite programs of professional education designed to provide for more skilled hands. "Every dime, every dollar given to the March of Dimes," he said, "is needed as never before, if we are to win out over polio. I am sure Waynesville area citizens will give, and give again, on behalf of all those children and adults who look to the March of Dimes for help when polio strikes."

MORE ABOUT Tires

tire has been the goal of tire engineers since the dawn of the automotive age.

Claude said the tubeless tire is just that—a tire that does not require an inner tube. In addition, he said, it has an inner layer of special gummy material that automatically seals punctures effectively and permanently right on the running wheel. Since the tire does not have an inner tube, he explained, it actually is easier to mount and take off than ordinary ones. Cold rubber has been added to the tread to give longer mileage.

The new product has been tested under the most severe conditions during the past six years—in the laboratory, on taxi fleets, on state police cars and on a special fleet of test cars, he said.

The new tire, he said, costs less than an ordinary tire with a safety inner tube. Besides it gives an easier ride, maintains correct air pressure for months and combines safe performance at high speeds with puncture-sealing protection.
