

Far-Reach Program On Poultry Raising Adopted

The Poultry Commission, operating under the Community Development program, recently adopted an eleven point program for the coming year. The chairman of the commission is Van Wells, of East Pigeon.

The program covers all phases of the poultry industry as far as producers are concerned. The full program as adopted is as follows:

1. The outlook for poultry for the coming year appears to be pretty good, especially for hatching eggs of the broiler type. With the shortage of meat in the United States and the world at the present time, the broiler industry looks favorable. And it is the only industry that can overcome a shortage in a short time. The over-all picture of the broiler industry for the coming year is good.

2. Hold a Poultry School in February in cooperation with the specialists from State College, giving the latest technical information on breeding, feeding, diseases, and management of birds.

3. Hold a series of meetings in the six or seven areas in the county on promotional work of poultry, with representatives of hatcheries, feed companies, banks, and newspapers being present. At these meetings information will be given of what can be expected in the hatching egg business, commercial eggs, broilers, and turkeys during the year. Representatives of hatcheries and buyers of eggs will be present to give information on their particular program.

4. Have poultry stops on community and county tours.

5. Visit poultry farms on out-of-state tour and see what other people are doing in the poultry industry.

6. Arrange for a representative from the county agent's office to attend all Home Demonstration Club meetings in January and give the women some facts on the poultry industry.

7. Due to the size of farms in Haywood County and the added income which is needed on many of the farms, especially the smaller ones, it was suggested that special emphasis be placed on the poultry industry during the year, and put on a concerted drive to increase this industry in order to provide an added income for some of our smaller farms.

8. Suggestions for the production of hatching eggs:

(a) Use New Hampshire broiler-type pullet chicks from pullorum cleaned hatcheries.

(b) Do not buy pullets from the producers of regular broilers, as these pullets are not fed to produce good pullets and hens.

(c) If unable to start with chicks, purchase New Hampshire broiler-type range-size pullets of the desired quality.

(d) Start with no less than 400 to 500 hens. It is not practical to care for much less than this number at one time.

(e) Follow a sound feeding and management program with chicks and hens. Proper feeding and management will play a big part in the income you can expect from your poultry project.

(f) Graze pullets on ladino clover as much as possible, after they reach the age to be turned out, to develop stronger, healthier pullets at less cost.

(g) Raise pullets in range shelters instead of houses, because it is cheaper and stronger pullets can be produced.

(h) Build range shelters as economically as possible.

(i) Use a first grade feed, but be sure you are getting the best price possible.

(j) If you are unable to produce enough oats on your farm, it is suggested that you buy scratch feed in the bulk during the summer when it is cheaper, and hold for winter feeding. Produce as much of your grain feed as possible on the farm.

(k) Convert old buildings on the farm, if available, into a chicken house, or build the most economical house possible. Blueprints of such houses can be obtained at the county agent's office free of charge. Have the approved amount of floor space for pullets.

(l) Cooperate with the purchaser of your hatching eggs in his program of good, sound poultry feeding and management practices.

(m) You may expect $2.00 per bird above feed cost per year, if you will follow the above practices.

GOAL: Have 50,000 additional hens in Haywood County in 1951 for the production of hatching eggs. There are buyers for hatching eggs from this many hens now.

9. Suggestions for the production of broilers:

Not To Run Again

Representative Monroe M. Redden announced Tuesday that he would not run for reelection to Congress in 1952. He will practice law in Hendersonville when his term expires on January 3, 1953.

As a member of the House Committee on Public Lands, Mr. Redden took a leading part in the fight for completion of the Blue Ridge Parkway and development of other federal projects in Western North Carolina. Redden's name has been prominently mentioned as a candidate for the Senate when Senator Clyde R. Hoey retires.

2 Hurt Speeding On Canton Streets

Driving down Academy Street in Canton at 60 miles an hour sent two negro men to the Haywood County hospital on Wednesday night, William Howell, listed by officers as driver of the car, was treated for lacerations and bruises. Lonnie Smith suffered a possible skull fracture in addition to injuries similar to Howell's.

According to investigating officers, the car went up on the curb after failing to make a curve, traveled down the sidewalk about 150 feet, struck a light pole, and careened back into the street.

No other cars nor pedestrians were struck, but electric service was interrupted temporarily.

Officers investigating the accident were Chief W. N. Stroup, Everett Moore, E. L. Wilson, and J. D. Woodard.

tion of broilers:

(a) Increase the broiler industry within the county.

(b) Keep a minimum of 2,000 broilers at a time in one operation. It is not economical to care for less than this at one time.

(c) Do not keep broilers and hatching egg flocks on the same farm, due to disease problems.

(d) Do not over-crowd your broilers.

(e) Use a sound feeding and management program in cooperation with dealers and buyers of broilers with whom you are working.

(f) Do not try to out-guess the market. Keep your house full at all times.

GOAL: Double the production of broilers in Haywood County during 1951.

Give Him a Valentine - Right in the Neck

VALEN-TIES . . . Cupid gets a helping hand from the neckwear industry this year. This young lady scores with a gift of a tie in marine blue silk printed with postmark motifs. At right is a sentimental trio with hidden messages. The letter print reads "Mr. Sweetie Pie," and "Dearest Valentine" and so on when held up to the mirror. The tie in the middle is painted with fluorescent paint, lights up in the dark with a sentimental message. The brown satin scroll print at right reads "Darling" when held horizontally. ## Generosity Of Friends Bring Happiness To Local Mother And Wounded Son

"You never know how many friends you have," said Mrs. Robert Chapman, "until real trouble comes along."

She was referring to her recent trip to Battle Creek, Michigan, to see her son, Sgt. Robert Chapman, Jr., a patient at the Percy Jones General Hospital there. Sgt. Chapman was flown in from the Korean front on January 4 for treatment of frostbitten hands and feet.

The American Legion posts in Hazelwood and Waynesville sparked a drive for funds to take Mrs. Chapman to Michigan. Numerous individuals, as well as employees of local industries, contributed a total of $243. "I'd like to thank every single one of them personally," Mrs. Chapman continued. "It would never have been possible for me to have gone without their help."

"I'd wanted to surprise him," she went on, "but his wife thought it would be wiser to let him know I was on my way. He didn't have much of anything to say when I walked in—you could tell he was so happy he just couldn't talk. And I was pretty excited myself; he's our only son, and the last time he was home was a year ago Christmas."

Mrs. Chapman was enthusiastic about the care given by the hospital to his patients. As a mother and a home-maker she approved the meals, the "snack" trays and other goodies, the games and puzzles which occupied the men's minds, and the movies twice a week—and a double feature Saturdays.

"They certainly don't lack for anything, those boys. It did relieve my mind a lot to be able to go up and see for myself just what kind of care he is getting."

Another source of encouragement to Mrs. Chapman was "seeing for herself" that her son's hands were recovering nicely. "They aren't any more discolored,"

Following the business meeting, members will tour the Western North Carolina Experiment Station, she smiled, "than what you'd get from sticking your own hands into hot dish water, and he can move them just like he always could."

Mrs. Chapman hopes that following partial amputation of both feet, her son will be able to return home in another two months. "And I do appreciate everybody's making it possible for me to be with him just before the operation had to be done. It did both of us good," she concluded.
