

Glance To Edit Cullowhee Book For Next Season

CULLOWHEE — (Special) — The race for Editor of the Cullowhee Mount, which stirred up more interest than the election of Senators could muster, came to an end last week when Bill Glance defeated Tom Young for the post.

The campaign saw more action than has any race for the same post in many years. Posters flew from trees and bulletin boards, loudly announcing that Young was trying to beat the "Machine". It was reported that a large sign stretched over the steps at the Student Union by the Glance supporters was stripped away sometime in the early hours of election day.

Three hundred voters showed up to decide the issue. Of these Glance was given 170 valid votes and Young got 128. It was the highest percentage vote turn out of the year.

James Mayfield defeated Woody Rhodes in the same election. Mayfield will serve as Business Manager next year. Though there was some indication that Glance and Mayfield might have been running partners, Mayfield polled a much higher vote than did Glance. He gained over two hundred of the three hundred votes cast.

AMORY, Miss — Little Craig Brasfield, having trouble peeling his baked potato, asked his mother to "please take the tag off."

My name is TOPSY!

"Hear that long, low whistle and then—'Topsy! Here, Topsy!?' That's my master calling. He wants me—not my brother who lives with the folks down the street, or my sister who lives two blocks over—but me, Topsy. That's why he calls me by name."

Of course, everybody has a name. And it's the same way with products you buy in the store. Each one has a name too—a brand name. That's the name a manufacturer puts on his product so you can tell it from any other.

So when you call for a product by its brand name, you get exactly the product you want.

Naturally, you have learned to buy by the brand name. You've found it is the only way to pick the product that exactly suits your taste.

Brand names mean protection for you! By knowing brand names, you make the manufacturer responsible for the quality of products that bear his name. Any manufacturer knows that if you find his products good, you will buy them. If not, you won't—and the manufacturer will be forced out of business.

Brand names mean progress... because the manufacturer is always looking for a way to improve his product—to add to the reputation of his brand name.

To be sure you get exactly what you want, always look for the brand name on a product before you buy. You'll find the ads in this newspaper a big help. They include the names of many of America's great brands.

American women have held official posts in our foreign service since the 20's. Today, 400 women are serving abroad as foreign service officers, reserve officers and staff officers. The women's roster represents about one-tenth of the entire corps. In addition, about 50 are assigned to the State Department in Washington.

In municipal government, three women are mayors of cities of over 5,000. As for the Federal Government, one-fourth of the total employment roster, or about 500,000 women are in federal service. About 500 occupy positions in policy-making and administrative fields. In addition, about 100 women are serving in important judicial posts in various parts of the country.

Threat of Failure at School

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

WHEN I get to thinking of all the school children who already are filled with haunting fears that they might not be promoted to the next grade at the end of this school year, my heart feels heavy. So many of these children hear at school and home the threat of failure in a tone of rebuke for their not having tried hard enough.

The assumption is that this threat of disgrace will cause them to try harder at their lessons. Of course it doesn't work that way. Nearly always it works in the opposite direction. The child has fewer successes at his books, feels more discouraged and suffers still more. He feels less worthy at school and at home and the whole world grows more dark and depressing for him. Just imagine how you and I might feel in his place.

Avoid the Word

Many wise teachers and parents avoid the word failure. In some schools the first few grades so overlap that the children there are put together at the kind of work they are ready to succeed at. Some whole elementary schools have gone so far as to promote all children at the end of each school term whether they have mastered the work of the present grade or not. While this latter plan may protect many children from threat of failure heard at school or home, it does not necessarily help the lagging child to catch up. Though a child may feel more comfortable to be assembled in a classroom with other children of the same age than if he were with children one or several years older, he may still be faced with indescribable suffering if he feels wholly bewildered trying to read, spell or do number work so hard that he can't enjoy moderate success. Even if he doesn't hear the word

"failure" he feels it and the inferiority and disgrace it may suggest.

Fortunate the child who at home and school is led to learn to read material, to spell words or to do number work easy enough to succeed at, regardless of the grade in which he happens to be. He must enjoy success in order to have the heart to put forward his best efforts.

Ways at School

Regardless of the ways at school, if your child is lagging in his learning there, do your best to help him feel unashamed. Working with his teacher, and sometimes with an expert, find out in each subject how far he has come in its mastery and help him work forward from there. If, for instance, he is in the fifth grade and reads very poorly, try him out on interesting reading matter that is easy enough for him to read well. It may be only of second or third grade difficulty. Set the stage so he won't feel ashamed of reading so easy matter. Enjoying success he will soon be able to read harder materials.

Do likewise with him in arithmetic, spelling or any other subject. Unless you can be very calm and patient in helping this child, you should employ a quiet, skillful teacher to help him for about half an hour a day for several days a week.

Catching Up

Skillful help might enable some children to catch up at school, some to be promoted, who otherwise would not be. Many other children will need such help through the summer or even through the next school year or longer.

To the foregoing ends are many suggestions in my home helps in reading, spelling and arithmetic, to be had in a stamped, self-addressed envelope sent to me in care of this newspaper.
