Lifting of Beef Controls Would Assure Plenty Of Meat, Says Farm Bureau

(Special to The Mountaineer)

R. Flake Shaw, Executive Vice-President, North Carolina Farm Bureau said on his return from Washington this week, where he attended a special meeting of livestock producers from the various states, that "farmers in the cattle producing Western Counties of the State will have no incentive to market high grade animals under existing OPS beef regulations."

He pointed out that "prices of meat are at present levels, not because of a lag in production but because of record high incomes and free spending of consumers."

"If beef controls are lifted," Shaw said, "farmers will boost meat output rapidly in the production race to outrun the increased need and in an effort to meet the inflated demand. Only a lack of confidence in future markets, due to man-made regulations, can cause them to cut back."

He said that "the average housewife blames the farmer for the high cost of beef. What she and the general public don't seem to understand is the fact that the price of meat is computed from the cost of living index, and not by the farmer. The real cause of the present meat crisis is the wage scale. It controls this cost of living index, which regulates the price of meat as well as all other farm commodities."

Shaw emphasized that "if beef controls are lifted, there definitely will be no shortage of meat, according to the past rates of consumption. The average consumption per person in the U. S. will be 148 pounds during 1951, an increase of three pounds over last year."

"While beef prices might seem high," he said, "pork and poultry are both in generous supply, and can be purchased at very reasonable prices. Only certain choice cuts of beef would be considered high under present market price levels."

According to the beef OPS regulation, markets that don't have a federal grading service will only be permitted to classify their beef under common grades.

There will be a special meeting at the Haywood County Court House May 21, to discuss these important issues. All farmers, cattle producers, and interested persons are urged to be present to express their views with Farm Bureau officials.

The North Carolina Farm Bureau is going all out with the American Farm Bureau Federation to do everything possible to eliminate unreasonable price controls on farm commodities.
