A listener-in to the conversation suggested that refusal to worry

"I worry," Miss Dietrich said. But not about myself. Just important things - family, children, profession, war. But not about looks, weight measurements."

"You look at Garbo today," suggested Miss Dietrich, and I'd love to if the Silent Swede didn't live so like a hermit. "She looks exactly as she did then."

Miss Dietrich was referring to her arrival in Hollywood from Germany in 1930.

"And Joan Crawford. Do you htink she looks so different? A'little thinner if anything, Joan Bennett-she has a grandchild, and she looks about 20 to me," Miss Bennett, at 41, will be tickled to hear this, The Berlin-born star was generously making the point that, contrary to a widespread impression, she has no special corner on glamor-after-40. "I do not see when I look about me," she said, "that there is such a change in anybody. Oh, of course, as the fashion changes, they look different in their clothes, and their hair changes. There are lots of people my age in the film business." Marlene speculated on why she is oftne pointed to in the senior-glamor bracket; "They just don't happen to have grandchildren." She has two-boys aged three and one. As to her own age (43 by her admission; 46 in the almanaes); 'Some people say I'm 60. Some even say 90. How does she feel when she hears that? "I just think these people have nothing else to worry about."
