Teen Talk

Everybody talks about father and mother, but what about father and daughter? It is possible for Dad and daughter to have a good relationship. And what about the mother who has no sons to accompany her on interesting junkets? She is left forever buying one of those hokey game and to amuse a trout stream without a little nod from his fishing partner saying "mine got away."

And who will help him when Mom those nice 24 hours about the one that says "Well, why not daughter?"

As can come in mighty too, as tutors for the boys. Most young girls have husbands. What better way than to take lessons from Dad? A girl who has the football lineup and averages of the local favorites has a much better chance in the romantic than stay-at-home girls who have little conversational interest to offer when they meet.

A girl who plans to make a career can find out what men tick by observing her more closely. It is the easiest class in wife schooling available. Most men are pretty much of a pattern when it comes to appraising women. Keep your eyes and ears open at home and you will pretty soon find out little things which annoy Dad and make him uncomfortable. That's half the battle in getting a man.

Also to be observed are man preferences in conversation, food, entertainment and recreation. All men are not alike, that is true. But basically you can profit by the experience of understanding at least one man. That's more than some married women can boast of on their 25th wedding anniversary. They still don't know any more than "getting along with him."

Most marriage counselors would advise seeking advice from Mom, but she'll probably be the first to admit that she doesn't know all the answers. Of course if Mother has impressed you with her keen handling of men folk you can observe both sides of the girl-boy relationship and profit by it even more.

The next time Pa looks a little glum, give him the "let's do it together" routine whether he is brooding about new unused golf balls or a moving picture. Why should daughters be left at home with dishpan hands, instead of seeing a bit of the world occasionally, anyway? Even if you have brothers, make a pitch for accompanying Dad on some interesting excursions. After all, if you've got to make a man happy by knowing a little bit about what he enjoys in life, let brother prepare for making a woman happy by hovering around the stove occasionally, and at least learning how to boil water.

Of course you might decide that you hope your future husband is quite a bit different than Pop. If you've got a father who hugs the newspaper after dinner and who only opens his mouth to eat and who wanders alone on his adventures, you might have decided "anything but that."

In that case you can make sure your gentleman has a few outdoor hobbies so that you can accompany him on some of his recreational jaunts and that he can be in his home without being thoroughly bored by it. Of course, in respect to Dad, some of this might be the fault of Mom, which is another thing to consider. You can profit by that, too, if you can discover just where she's made her mistakes.

All in all, daughters can learn much from fathers, whether they like to bird walk or collect stamps. One little outing with Dad should give you enough solid material for a conversation with any new boy you meet.

"Prophet Without Honor"
WHEN Jesus began to preach in His own country, He taught in the synagogue. His listeners were astonished and said, "Whence hath this Man this wisdom, and these mighty works?"

Is not this the carpenter's Son? Is not His mother called Mary? And His brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? And His sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this Man all these things? And they were offended in Him. But Jesus said to them, "A prophet is not without honor, save in His own country, and in His own house." And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief. (Taken from St. Matthew 14, 54-58.)
