Miss Mary Bowles Is Bride Of J. D. Hyatt

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Miss Mary Georgiana Bowles of New York City, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Bowles of Boston, Mass., to Joseph Dewey Hyatt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dewey Hyatt of Hazelwood.

The Rev. Broadus E. Wall officiated at the ceremony, which took place here Saturday evening, June 2, at 8:30 o'clock. Only a small group of relatives attended.

The bride wore a navy street-length dress with white accessories and a corsage of white roses.

After the ceremony the couple left for Johnson City, Tenn., where they will reside for a few months before returning to New York to make their home.

Mrs. Hyatt was graduated from the Summerville High School in Boston and more recently has been employed by the American Telephone Company in New York.

Mr. Hyatt attended Mars Hill College after graduation from the Waynesville High School. He served three years in the Army during World War II and has since studied voice at the Julliard School of Music, New York, the New York Music College, and Columbia University. During the past year he has attended the Theatre Wing in New York.

Library Publications Contain Articles By Miss Johnston

Current issues of North Carolina Libraries, publication of the North Carolina Library Association, and The Wilson Library Bulletin, national library publication, contain articles written by Miss Margaret Johnston, Haywood County librarian.

The articles describe the program carried on by the librarians in twelve western North Carolina counties in promoting local interest in the Cherokee Indian Drama.
