Does Business By Air

DENVER (AP) — Around Stapleton Airfield, they call Robert Tripe the "flying safe-cracker". Tripe has flown more than 10,000 miles on emergency calls when his special skill was needed to snap open a stubborn safe or coax a balky lock to cooperate.

Tripe was an aerial gunner during World War II and had ambitions to become a commercial airline pilot. But he also wanted to get married and the Mrs. Tripe-to-be said she had no desire to become a fly boy's wife.

However, she admits now that in a locksmith's business, there are times when he has to take to the air to get the job done in a hurry.
