MORE ABOUT Rollman

one-world government will come, probably in the normal course of a progressing world civilization, without any bloodshed. But to put a tremendous amount of energy now into a one-world government would be a grave mistake.

At present we have to channel our energy into establishing a firm foundation for broader international cooperation. We must first raise the standard of living, of health, of education, of fellowship, all over the world to the standard known in the United States, contain Communism to the places where it is now, and even hope to stamp out Communism in Russia. Then, in a few years from now, let's start talking about one-world government and then again, let's not just talk about it, let's take the necessary action. At that time the members of the popular movement can start a one-world government in a very, very short time.

A world government to promote the mutual interests of the various nations, as our own national government promotes the mutual interests of the individual States.

No congress or administration can go further or faster than we, the people, want to go. We want to go fast and we want to go far. We want to make better people out of ourselves and we want to improve the lives of 2 billion other people.

It can be done and it will be done if we, the people, are ready to start living.

The road to hell and war is paved with nothing but good intentions. The road to peace is paved with nothing but sacrifices and good works.
