THE YOUNGER SET

By ROSE WOMACK

"It's all over but the memories." Yes, after a week of cleaning, decorating, and of course, enthusiasm, the senior class of W.T.H.S. held their banquet. The dining room of the Balsam Mountain Springs hotel was the setting for the glorious (once in a lifetime) event. A color scheme of red and white was used, built around a theme of "The Coronation Ball".

A very inspiring invocation was given by Bobby Compton, after which dinner was served by the Junior representatives.

Chosen to rule over the royal festivities by secret ballot were King Ted Owen, and Queen Mary Lou Ferguson. Mr. Weatherby crowned them, and they certainly looked natural seated on their thrones.

Dressed as court jesters were the Junior representatives, who provided entertainment. They danced the Minuet and did individual entertaining.

Aaron Gibson gave a toast to the teachers, and Miss Margaret Terrell, Senior English teacher, responded. The Rev. James Coleman was introduced then, and told a number of jokes with reference to Mr. Bowles, Mr. Weatherby and members of the class. His speech was short and very concise. He told the seniors to "always look up at the stars and not down at the mud."

One of the most thrilling moments of the evening was when the Seniors received their class annuals. They certainly were proud of Kenny Underwood, who as co-editor, was responsible for the publication of a masterpiece.

Mr. Bowles gave the farewell speech and John Calhoun sang "Through the Years".

The Laughing Horse

LOUISVILLE (AP) — Laffanago got his name because of his disposition. "After we bought him as a yearling," says Abe Giddins, one of the stable owners, "the colt acted like he was laughing. When he was taken on the track he always wanted to go. That's how he got the name."

Feminine Frock

By VERA WINSTON

BACK again with us and very welcome too is the soft, feminine, one-piece frock, a nice choice for dressy occasions during the months ahead. Gray sheer with white lace is used for this one, which would be nice in navy with pink as well. The low, round neck is slashed a little at one side where a string bow is perched. The skirt consists of tier upon tier of pleats edged in lace, criss-crossed current fashion. The silhouette bells towards the hem. This is a good wedding guest choice.
