Sen. Smathers Favors UMT

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Senator George Smathers (D-Fla.) declared tonight that America must adopt universal military training or face national bankruptcy under the present military spending program.

"We might well lose this conflict with the Communists by having our economy fail," Smathers said.

But Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D-Colo.) bitterly attacked UMT, saying the belief that it would make the nation strong was only "a delusion" and "a snare".

"We almost lost the present war," Johnson said, "and we will continue to lose wars all around the earth if we adopt universal military training."

Both Smathers and Johnson agreed in a pre-filmed debate on the NBC television show "American Forum of the Air" that the United States faces a grave danger from Russia and communism. But they were at complete odds on the value of UMT in facing that danger.

Johnson insisted that UMT

Summer Evenings

By VERA WINSTON

HERE'S a perfect beauty for a dance date or a summer wedding. It is of pure silk organza with imposed Chantilly type lace on the pretty pie-cut neckline and the diamond shaped insets on the fully flared skirt. The bodice and upper part of the skirt are horizontally pin-tucked. The organza is laid over flesh colored sheer that shows up beautifully under the lace and is softly veiled under the filmy fabric.

would place in the hands of any president the power to "get us into every war on the face of the earth." With UMT, he said, "there never will be another war declared by Congress... if we delegate the tyrannical, totalitarian powers over to the president."

Smathers argued there was absolutely no provision under UMT that would give the president any more power to send reservists into war than he now has.

Additional Courses To Be Offered At Cullowhee

CULLOWHEE — Further expansion in the curriculum of Western Carolina College has been announced by President Paul A. Reid, who reports that courses in agriculture will be offered at the school for the first time this fall.

Terminal courses of one and two years' duration have been worked out by college authorities to cover many phases of the agricultural industry. These classes, which will begin in September, will also be used as general electives in the total college program.

Reid stated, "It is expected that many young people who are unable, financially or otherwise, to take a regular 4-year agricultural course at other institutions, can come here and take the one- and two-year offerings."

The continued improvement of Western North Carolina agriculture by further educating young men who plan to farm in this area is the aim of the program, Reid said.

The definite need for such a program was indicated in a study made last year by the college's Institutional Research Committee, which compiled a report on the college's total program and future needs.

A leading suggestion of WNC civic clubs and farm groups consulted by the committee was that agricultural and forestry work be made available at the college. This answer to the question, "how can Western Carolina better serve this area of the state?" was adopted by the faculty in the new addition to the curriculum.

"This is another indication," President Reid said, "of the desire and effort of WCC to serve the people of this area. The new buildings and equipment at the college make it possible for the institution to broaden its work to include the general field of agriculture."

Operating within the Department of Science, which is headed by Prof. C. F. Dodson, the agricultural courses will be offered in the following subjects: soils and fertilizers, field crops, animal husbandry, poultry science and practices, farm management, soil conservation and land use, forestry and wildlife management, farm shop, fruit growing, horticulture and home gardening.

"These classes will also enrich the total program of education for those training to teach in the public schools," Reid said and added, "It is expected that work in agriculture will be coordinated with the expanded work in home economics and in industrial arts."

Farms within the general area of the college are expected to be used for observation, demonstration and laboratory purposes, to supplement the classroom work. "With plans being worked out for the September inauguration of this program," Reid concluded, "a new instructor in agriculture will probably be announced within the next few days."

Meats to Cook Over Open Fire

By ALICE DENHOFF

It's picnic time coming up! And there that tastes as delectable as satisfying, as down-to-earth as the foods prepared over an open fire and eaten out-of-doors at the picnic of the season? That cooks quickly and eaten between buns is best, be it steak or burger. But good and not expensive round steak when prepared this way.

Thin strips of round steak, onion and sliced pickle, all the whole thing in a bowl of bacon strips. Skewer and broil slowly. They eaten right off the skewer.

To Flavor Steaks Here's what an old barbecue suggests for those occasions when you want to have steaks just right in flavor. Turn the coals in the grill turned red, toss 2 or 3 cut cloves directly under your meat. The garlic fumes will the meat as it cooks, give the right, hearty flavor for your picnic meal.

picnic time and the hamburger really comes own. Form the patties of meat mixed with minced onion and seasoning before you place between aluminum or heavy waxed paper, they're ready to cook when the right. Sear on one side, brown on the other, working quickly to keep the meat juicy.

Frankfurter Ideas

Then there's that other monarch of the picnic, the frankfurter, mainstay when the budget begins to sag.

To dress these favorites up in style, split large frankfurters down their middles, spread with prepared mustard, fill with chopped pickle, then turn over to the cooking department to broil. Chances are that you'll find this one the most requested item on your picnic menu right through the season.

For another fancy frank idea, split them lengthwise, insert a finger-sized piece of cheese in each and top with a slice of bacon. Broil until cheese is melted and bacon is cooked. Serve in long buns.

Lamb Shoulder Steaks

If the usual fare begins to pall, here's an idea—lamb shoulder steaks. They're a thrifty buy and good eating when cooked over an outdoor grill. Broil them exactly as you would beefsteak.

For an inexpensive and easy picnic dish, put in kettle one potato for each person and cover with water. When spuds are almost tender, add enough frankfurters for everybody and heat thoroughly. With buttered buns, ketchup, fresh fruit and cookies for dessert, you have a simple and tasty picnic meal.
