

Wally Fowler To Appear Here Tuesday Night

The original Wally Fowler gospel and spiritual all-night singing concert will be presented on Tuesday, July 27, in the Waynesville High School auditorium by the Kiwanis Club.

Doors will be open at 6:30; the concert will last from 8:30 until 11:30. The show will feature both Wally Fowler, "The All-Night Singing Man," and the Chuck Wagon Gang.

Tickets are now on sale at the Biltmore Dairy Bar, Haywood Furniture Co. and Sheppe's. Admission is $1 advance and $1.25 at the door.

Iron Duff 3, Girls—Francis Cove 14; Iron Duff 3.
The Morning Star tour was attended by 80 residents of that community and 66 from South Clyde.
A tour of the community was held in the morning and lunch was served at noon at Morning Star School.
Following group singing led by the Rev. Kenneth Crouse of Morning Star and Kyle Lindsey of South Clyde, contests were staged—with winners fairly well divided between the two communities.
In the softball games, however, the results were completely one-sided—with Morning Star boys winning, 26-0, and the Morning Star girls victorious, 33-0.
Complete results were:

His major accomplishments and principal events in the life of Sequoyah, famed Cherokee Indian peacemaker, were related by Jonathan H. Woody at a meeting of the Waynesville Kiwanis Club Tuesday night at Spaldon's.
Describing the study of Sequoyah's life as "the hobby of a world of people," Mr. Woody disclosed that more books have been written about the celebrated Indian than about U. S. Grant and nearly as many as about Abraham Lincoln and Robert E. Lee.
Five states now have Sequoyah counties and the giant trees in California — the sequoia — were named after him. Oklahoma has especially honored the great native of Cherokee N. C., by placing a statue of him in the national capitol in Washington, Mr. Woody said.
He is also portrayed in "Unto These Hills," the speaker said, and his part in the Battle of Vinegar Bend is brought out.
The exact date and location of Sequoyah's birth are unknown, Mr. Woody told the Kiwanians, but it has been established as being some time between 1775 and 1783, possibly at New Echota, the former Cherokee capital, near the present site of Calhoun, Ga.
His father was Nathaniel Gist, engineer in George Washington's Continental Army, it was pointed out.
Possibly Sequoyah's outstanding accomplishment, Mr. Woody asserted, was to devise a syllabary to permit the Cherokees to communicate by the written word. Before his time, there had been no such language.
Whereas it took 1,000 years to develop the English language, 2,000 the Chinese, and 4,000 the Grecian, Sequoyah established his Cherokee system of phonetics in only six years, the speaker related. It is so simple, he added, it can be learned in from only three to six days.
This 86-character syllabary was utilized for communication by a special printing press devised by Sequoyah. Later, however, it was ordered destroyed by Gen. Sherman—also portrayed in "Unto These Hills."
After being moved to Oklahoma with other Cherokees, Sequoyah served as a peacemaker among a number of tribes in the Southwest. Later he became very religious, Mr. Woody said, and distributed Bibles among his people.
During a trip to Mexico, Sequoyah became ill and died—in about 1843. His body is now being sought by a number of states—including his native North Carolina and Oklahoma.
Concluding his talk, Mr. Woody characterized Sequoyah as "a brilliant man, great doctor, and wonderful artist."

Moose Hear Regional Head
Frank Ray, regional director of the Loyal Order of Moose, discussed the principles of the order and stressed its benefits to orphan children at a meeting of the Waynesville lodge Monday night. A number of Asheville members were guests at the meeting.
Children of deceased Moose members are sent to the organization's home at Mooresheart, Ill. Among graduates of the high school there this year was a girl from Franklin.
A social gathering will be held in the lodge hall by the Moose at 7:30 p. m. Friday. Members, their wives and children are invited.
Pie Eating Contest
Jackie Setzer and May Holcombe (winner) of Morning Star.
Bubble Gum Contest
Roy Rhinehart, Ann Guy, Troy Rhinehart, Phillip Johnson (winner), Loretta Medford, Barbara Wilson, Troy Williams, David Williams, all of Morning Star; Jimmy Smart, Lonnie Jackson, Shirley Smart, Doris Ann Underwood, Gerald Jackson, Tommy Rogers, Clifford Underwood, Billy Lindsey, all of South Clyde.
