As Plain As The Nose On Your Face...

OPERATING A BANK is not very different from operating any other business which is run on a sound and conservative basis.

IN THE FIRST PLACE, CREDIT is an essential commodity in most lines of business, and credit is a thing that can't be bought with dollars and cents — and having credit is the next best thing to having money. A man or a woman builds up his credit by looking after his obligations as they come due — not a few days or a week after they come due.

THE MAN who pays his grocery bill, or his doctor bill, his hardware account or any other of those bills which accrue in most any line of business on time usually has little difficulty in securing credit. His creditors have learned by experience that he is a person who meets his obligations as they come due.

BANKS HAVE pretty much the same standards except more stringent ones for the simple reason that banks are under direct and rigid requirements from both State and Federal Banking authorities. For that reason no good, well-managed bank likes to have in its note-case, notes which are even as much as one day past due. And when a borrower gets to the place where his credit reaches a place where he can not or does not take care of his obligations on time, and as they come due, then, pretty soon, he discovers that he has no credit—anywhere. In the days ahead, that thing called "CREDIT" should be carefully guarded against that day when it may be really needed.

ANOTHER ONE of the many services which the bank in your community renders is that it not only supplies credit but that, over a period of years—and credit is not established in a day—it enables those who do business with it to build up a line of credit which, throughout the years, will be beneficial in numerous ways.

THERE IS a reason—and a good one it is—why some people have credit while others do not have it. If you have any questions to ask about it, any officer of this bank—or of any other good bank—will be glad to go into the matter, in detail, at any time. AND IT IS WORTH THINKING ABOUT.

WE APPRECIATE your business, and there is good reason for that too — the business which you and others give us helps to make us grow and prosper.
