Science Thriller 'Gog' To Play At The Strand

"Gog" is a science-fiction film—but with a difference. Its many wonders are not projected with a view to becoming actuality in some distant millennium, but within five, or, at most, ten years from today.

An Ivan Tors production filmed in Eastman color, "Gog" opens on Wednesday at the Strand Theatre through United Artists release. Richard Egan, Constance Dowling and Herbert Marshall are co-stars, and the supporting cast is headed by John Wengraf, Philip Van Zandt, Valerie Vernon, Steve Roberts, Michael Fox, Marian Richman and Beverly Jocher.

In addition to producing "Gog," Tors was also author of the original story on which Tom Taggart based his screenplay. Herbert L. Strock directed the film, and the music was composed and conducted by Harry Sukman.

The central theme of "Gog" revolves around the attempts of a determined band of enemy agents to sabotage a U. S. government plan for the launching of the first platform in space, by murdering the top scientists engaged in bringing the project to reality.
