Hodges' office, the executive committee of the university's board of trustees freed Gray for the job by granting an indefinite leave of absence. Hodges said the leave would begin about July 15 and would not run as long as two years. The committee declined to accept the resignation which President Gray offered in order to take the federal assignment.

In Gray's absence, the executive committee placed with University Provost J. Harris Purks the "full powers of the president, with authority to act as president."
