PARENT PROBLEMS

Should Reckless Youth Be Permitted to Drive?

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D. IT'S amazing how readily parents will sign a child's application for a driver's license or car ownership, when they know he is a careless, dangerous driver. Many of them haven't the courage to say No; yet once the youth has the license, his parents may have no power to revoke it. On April 20, however, Governor Averill Harriman signed a bill passed by the Legislature of the State of New York, giving this state's parents the power to have their child's license taken away. The bill requires the State Motor Vehicles Commission to revoke a junior license if one parent withdraws his or her consent. Once it is revoked, the junior license can't be reissued for thirty days. Still Holds True Previous to this law, parents in New York State had nothing to say about whether a child between 16 and 18 years of age could continue to hold a license. To my knowledge, this still holds true in all other states. Of course, courts have, on occasion, revoked licenses at the request of parents. Usually, however, most parents tend to be lenient in this matter, regardless of the youth's proved unfitness to drive. Perhaps, in spite of the new law, human weakness will prevail; but it is to be hoped that most parents will have the courage of their convictions and call on this law, if necessary. Torturous Hours Think of the torturous hours some parents endure, riding with a youth who refuses to heed the warning to drive more carefully. This could easily be avoided, if the parent—after the first warning had been ignored—had the youth pull off the road and then refused him the use of the car for several weeks or months. It's not just a matter of the parents' peace of mind, but of effective education of the youth in safe driving. If he goes on as a heedless, reckless driver in his parents' presence, how likely will he be to drive safely when he is on his own? Not Firm Enough Unfortunately, many parents lack the fortitude to be decisive in such matters. Some are actually afraid of their child. I receive letters from worried widows who confess they signed a permit for a son's license against their better judgment and are now paying a severe penalty. Of course the time to begin to prepare the teen-ager to accept No as final is when he is a teen-ager.
