"A summer afternoon pink tea type of Christianity is not enough in this mad moment of history," Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Atlanta, Ga., told a Southwide conference of Methodist ministers at Lake Junaluska.

"Why are we so complacent in these fateful times when the world situation has changed almost overnight, and multiplied millions have forsaken Christian beliefs to embrace false philosophies?" he asked.

Bishop Moore, president of the Methodist Board of Missions, has supervised Methodist interests in Europe, Africa, China, Japan and Korea during his 21 years as a bishop of the church. He is the daily platform speaker at the conference of ministers from nine southeastern states. The meeting runs through Tuesday.

"Where there is no vision, the people perish," Bishop Moore quoted an Old Testament proverb in citing a need for "Christian leadership in high and low places to combat the trends and tendencies which endanger the vitality and perpetuity of the Christian Church."

Bishop Moore said the more he travels abroad "the more fearful I become concerning the failure of Americans to grasp the terrible spread of communism, humanism, nationalism and secularism and other ideologies that have captured the minds of so many."

He listed secularism as America's chief danger, declaring "I

Parris To Talk Here Aug. 29th

Few white men know the Cherokee, their history, legends and lore, as does the director of public relations of the Cherokee Historical Association, John Parris.

Parris will speak here in Waynesville Friday evening at 8 p.m. He will give an informal evening of old-fashioned mountain story-telling.

Parris grew up on the knee of a Cherokee chief, the late beloved Sampson Owl, from whose lips he first heard the history of the proud Indian race. And from his parents and their friends in his native mountain town of Sylva, he learned the many legends and tales of pioneer heroism which had their roots among their forefathers here in Western North Carolina.

Parris' "tale-spinning" evening is sponsored by the Waynesville-Hazelwood-Lake Junaluska Chamber of Commerce and is part of a series of five cultural events it is presenting during the mid-summer. Admission is $1, all profit going to the Haywood County Library building fund. Tickets are available at the Chamber of Commerce office.

This event will be held at the New Central Elementary School.
