Pigeon River Road

that the Pigeon River road as referred to in the application of Tennessee and North Carolina to the Bureau of Roads, starts at Waterville at the site of the Carolina Power and Light Co. dam on the Tennessee line in Haywood County, follows the general course of the Pigeon River into Haywood County about 24 miles to a point near the mouth of Jonathan Creek, takes a general course to Clyde and follows U.S. routes 19 and 23 into Asheville.

This road, he added, includes a section from Hendersonville to Spartanburg, S. C., and would be part of the defense route from the Middle West in the Cincinnati, Ohio, area to the Atlantic Ocean, at Charleston, S. C.

A requirement of the particular section of the so-called Middle West to east sea coast route is that it touch Knoxville and Asheville, he added.

Buchanan said there has been some misunderstanding in North Carolina that the French Broad River road was to be a part of the interstate highway system. Actually, he said, this section of the system never has been exactly delineated.

The control points on it were set as Knoxville, Asheville and Spartanburg, he said.
