The group voted to invite all organizations who solicit funds to participate in the United Fund campaign, and in so doing, the group pledged to assist such organizations in staging an educational program when sought.

Interest in the program was manifested by the large attendance. The consensus of opinion being that there is a definite need for fewer soliciting campaigns in the community.

"We do not think this will eliminate all of them, but we are sure from the experiences of other towns, that it cuts them down to a minimum," Dr. Fender told the group.

The group adopted the by-laws and constitution as prepared by a committee composed of W. Curtis Russ, Dr. John Penny, Dave Hyatt and William Medford.

Ned Tucker, executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce, told of the letters received by the Chamber of Commerce urging that a study be made of the United Fund plan and presented to the community. Tucker went to a district meeting and got details which he brought back to the directors of the organization for study.

Tucker said he had not heard of any opposition to the plan, and was highly pleased at the comments he had heard favoring the establishment of such a program here.

John Wood, Carolinas United field executive told of the success of 73 Carolina communities. Wood discussed the work of the admissions committee, and the importance of inviting every organization to join the United Fund plan.

Details for setting up an office, and getting letters of invitation out began immediately after the meeting.

President Fender said United Fund would only accept agencies who made application for admission to the organization.

"By pooling our efforts, we can cut down on the cost of staging campaigns," President Fender said. "Some United Fund campaigns have been staged in the Carolinas for less than five per cent, while some individual drives have cost as much as half of every dollar raised," he continued.
