That's why many schools throughout the country are urging parents to encourage their small fry to get dressed up for school this fall, and give up the sloppy look of frayed jeans and flapping

In schools where strict rules of dress have been enforced, it has been noted that student behavior improved noticeably. Small boys aren't so likely to get into sery will be open for the fist fights and other troubles if they are wearing their good suits, say teachers. And small girls act their best when they look their prettiest.

Manufacturers of children's clothes are going along with the idea, and present school clothes with a dressed-up look this fall.

For boys, the blazer-and-slacks combination, worn with neat shirt and tie, is a favorite back-toschool outfit. Blazers come in flannel, tweed or corduroy, with vivid colors vying in popularity with the charcoal grays and browns,
