Bob Francis Tells Forsythe Squires About Haywood

Haywood is a fabulous county in the mountains of Western North Carolina.

That is the conviction of the County Squires of Winston Salem after hearing Bob Francis tell them a thing or two about what goes on here.

The Squires were also convinced that Haywood County turns out some fabulous tale-tellers, as was evidenced by a two-column feature written by Martin Howard, farm editor, for the Winston-Salem Journal.

According to Howard, "Mr. Bob, now 66 and bald of head and seamed of face and as full of vinegar and honey as few men ever enjoy," spoke to the Country Squires and their guests at a luncheon.

"Unlike Kerr Scott, who was born at the head of the Branch," Mr. Bob is quoted as saying, "I was born at the foot of Raccoon Creek. Us folks of Ratchliffe Cove usually have a reason for what we do — and what we do usually is sparked off by something mighty impressive, and things just sort of gather speed and scope from there on." A good example, he said, was how Raccoon Creek got its name — and with that he proceeded to tell one of his best tales.

Howard's story includes a brief account of "Mr. Bob's" activities and his contribution to the development and progress of Haywood County.

S. R. Mitchiner, now Forsyth farm agent, worked with Mr. Bob in the mid-thirties and Wayne Corpene, now head of the agriculture division of Wachovia Bank and Trust Company in Winston-Salem, later worked with him as farm agent. These men, no doubt, introduced the speaker to his Forsyth audience.
