

ASC Committeemen Win Reelection To Office

All three members of the Haywood County ASC committee have been returned to office for another year by committee chairmen of the 12 community ASC groups.

Starting this week, Floyd Fisher of Fines Creek began serving his fourth term as chairman, T. C. Davis of Iron Duff his fifth term as vice chairman, and Jack Davis of Beaverdam his second term as regular member.

Elected to the county ASC committee for the first time were Gay Bradshaw of Crabtree, first alternate, and Rowe Ledford of White Oak, second alternate.

The county committee will meet regularly twice a month and for called meetings whenever necessary.

County farmers who have suggestions or criticisms to make concerning the ASC program in Haywood County are invited to contact members of the ASC committee.

She smiled a smile of contentment, and went her way.

Felmet fingered the two bills, glanced at the thermometer on the courthouse lawn indicating the status of the United Fund Campaign, and whispered to himself:

"Oh, for a thousand more souls like that—thinking of others; sharing, and receiving a genuine happiness unknown to those who have never tried giving for the sheer joy of living—truly this is another widow's mile."

said: "Advertising today is a must for any of us. America is living on wheels today, and it is an established fact that the tourist is seeing the land in which he lives. Advertising of today has made them conscious of the wonders of our land and of places they have yet to see. Many thousand inquiries of information as to places to stay in our area have been coming in each year, and have all been answered, but we still need to reach many others who have not yet learned of our beautiful mountain area.

"So with the understanding and cooperation of all who are in or connected with the tourist business to get behind a well planned advertising program as much as we can afford, we surely will profit as many other areas have."

Here's How To Prevent Shine Caused By Ironing

By RUTH CURRENT, State Home Demonstration Agent

PREVENT IRON SHINE — To prevent iron shine, especially on dark rayons and acetates, take the following tips:

(1) Don't let your iron get too hot for the fabric.

(2) Always use a well-padded board.

(3) Iron collars, plackets and other double thickness sections with the help of a pressing cloth.

(4) Always rinse clothing thoroughly after washing to avoid greasy soap stains.

USE THE RIGHT IRON TEMPERATURE—New rules requiring that rayon and acetate be identified as separate fibers have taken the hit-or-miss element out of ironing fabrics made of these fibers. Now that labels tell you whether a fabric is all-rayon, all acetate, or a blend of both, follow these iron temperature rules for best results:

All-rayon fabrics take a hot iron — almost as hot as you use for cotton.

All-acetate fabrics need a warm, not hot, iron since acetate is sensitive to heat and will melt at high temperature.

Blended fabrics that contain both rayon and acetate, should be ironed with a moderate iron — somewhere between warm and hot. The higher percentage of heat-sensitive acetate in the fabric, the cooler your iron should be.

If your iron has no heat control, start with a warm iron and let it heat gradually until the fabric irons well. Keep the iron at this heat by turning it off and on at intervals.

In the group are Mrs. Sam Queen, welfare superintendent; Mrs. Clara Rippeoe, Mrs. Wanda Leatherwood, and Mrs. Jack Cole.

My Favorite Stories

By CARL GOERCH

Just as I reached the outskirts of Oxford one day, I noticed a hitch-hiker standing by the side of the road. He looked like a pretty decent sort of chap, so I stopped the car.

"Going to Durham?" he inquired politely.

"No—Raleigh," I told him, "but I'll be glad to take you as far as Creedmoor."

"Certainly would appreciate it." He got into the car. A nice looking young fellow, about 22 or 23 years old.

"You from Raleigh?" he inquired.

"No," I replied. "I'm just visiting there for a few weeks and this car belongs to some friends I'm staying with. I've only been in North Carolina a few days."

"Where's your home?" he wanted to know.

"Zicartu," I told him, nonchalantly.

He looked at me in surprise. "Where in the world is that?"

"South Sea Islands."

Well, sir, I've never seen anybody become so suddenly interested in a stranger. "You mean to say that you live in the South Sea Islands?" he gasped.

"Been down there for about fifteen years."

"And what's the name of the island where you live?"

"Zicartu," I told him again. "It isn't so very far from Bali-Bali. I run a coconut plantation down there and do a little pearl fishing on the side."

And then the questions came thick and fast. I explained to him that besides myself there were three other white men on the island, about 200 natives.

"What kind of folks are the natives?" he wanted to know.

It was too good an opportunity to lose and—as I have often said—everyone needs to exercise his imagination occasionally, so I let him have all the details. I told him about the uprising that we had had down there three years ago, when the other white men and myself were trapped in our cabin and had to withstand a siege of the natives for two weeks. There's no use going into all the particulars here, but I don't know when I've had a more interested or more appreciative audience. He just literally hung onto my words.

He was interested in what kind of people the native were. I told him that they wore very little apparel. His eyes sparkled.

He also wanted to know about the pearl fishing, and I imagine that I gave him some information along that line that nobody in the pearl fishing game ever heard of before.

I must have painted a very beautiful picture of the scenery at Zicartu, because he said that one of these days he hoped to visit that part of the world.

There was never a moment's lull in the conversation—all the way from Oxford to Creedmoor. When we got to the junction I slowed down and stopped.

"Well," I said, "I reckon this is where you want to get out, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir. And I certainly thank you for picking me up."

"You're entirely welcome."

He opened the door, got out, and then shut it. Just as I was getting ready to start off, he called out: "And another thing, Mr. Goerch, if I'm ever in Raleigh on Sunday night, would it be all right if I came up to the radio studio for your broadcast?"

I looked at him for a moment in utter confusion. Then I hurriedly stepped on the accelerator and got away from there.

The ungrateful brute! He'd been stringing me all along and I hadn't had enough sense to realize it.

THE OLD HOME TOWN

TODAY'S Menu

Rice Is Used As Base For A Novel Dessert

By ALICE DENHOFF

LET'S start with a specially fine buffet idea, a change from the inevitable cake and ice cream that seems to have been our lot at buffet parties lately. But at one party we struck gold. We asked for the recipe and here it is, to serve ten nicely.

Use Uncooked Rice

Put 1 c. uncooked white rice and 4 c. milk in a 2 qt. or larger saucepan. When bubbles appear around the edge of the saucepan, turn heat as low as possible. Cover and leave over low heat for 45 min. or until most of the milk has evaporated, but do stir several times during cooking. Stir in 1/2 c. sugar and tsp. vanilla.

Remove half of this rice mixture to a mixing bowl and into it stir 1/2 c. fudge sauce or other semisweet, very thick chocolate sauce.

Chocolate and Vanilla

Next, thoroughly grease a 9x9x-1/2 in. loaf pan. Drop tsp. of the chocolate and vanilla rice mixtures into the loaf pan, alternating the dark and light mixtures.

If the fudge sauce you use has made the chocolate mixture rather thin, allow it to cool slightly. However, the rice should be warm when it is placed in the loaf pan if it is to mold and hold together properly as a loaf.

After half of the loaf pan has been filled with the light and dark mixtures, press the rice with the back of a wet tsp. Then continue filling the loaf pan, alternating the light and dark rice mixture. Press with the tsp. so that the rice will be packed firmly into the loaf pan. Cool. Cover and chill until time to serve.

When ready to serve, ice the loaf with 1/2 pt. cream which has been whipped stiff with 2 tsp. sugar and tsp. vanilla added. Decorate the top with swirls of chocolate, chocolate shavings or macarino cherries.
