Community Auction Here To Begin Saturday, Oct. 13

Plans have been made for the first of a weekly series of Community Auction sales to begin October 13, John R. Carver, announced today in behalf of the Recreation Commission.

The auction will be held on the court house parking lot, 10 a.m. Carver said Phillip Cronkrite, auctioneer, manager of the Farmers Market, Hendersonville, and operator of a similar plan there, will come here to get the auction started.

Virgil Holloway, working with Carver, said that anything from clothing, livestock, machinery and furniture will be handled at the auction.

"Items that are of little value to the owner, in many cases, are of much value to someone else," Holloway said.

The owners will pay a fee of 20 per cent on wearing apparel and furniture; 5 per cent on hardware, farm equipment and machinery, livestock.

Carver said a small flat fee would be charged on items where bids were rejected by the owner.

The Community Auction plan has been very successful in many places, and those back of the project here felt that a similar program here would be beneficial. Profits of the auction will go to the Recreation Commission.

Plans and specifications for the new Pigeon Street School were approved today by the State Department of Education, and construction is expected to start on the new building within 10 days, Superintendent of Schools Lawrence B. Leatherwood has announced.

An appropriation for the school was approved August 31.

Mr. Leatherwood said that the contracts for the building have already been written and will be signed soon.

The total amount of the contract is in excess of $100,000. The Jerry Liner Construction Co. of Lake Junaluska has the general contract; Young and Brookshire of Canton have the heating and plumbing contracts; and Martin Electric Co. of Waynesville the wiring and electrical fixtures contract.

Mr. Leatherwood said the new school, to be built across Ninevah Road from the old school, will have one self-contained primary room, two grammar-grade rooms, an office, library book storage room, two restrooms, kitchen, and cafeteria with stage. Construction will be of brick and masonry.

Waynesville Is Again Designated Labor-Surplus Area

Waynesville is again among the towns and cities in North Carolina to be designated as a labor surplus area, according to an announcement by Henry Kendall of the Employment Security Commission at Raleigh.

The classification will entitle plants in the towns to a priority in the award of defense contracts by the federal government and will allow firms in the areas stepped-up tax amortization of the cost of new plants or expansion of existing facilities, Kendall said.

Other areas eligible to receive procurement preference and rapid amortization, he added, include Kinston, Rocky Mount, Fayetteville, Mount Airy, and Shelby-Kings Mountain.

In all of these areas the number of workers seeking jobs is considerably in excess of available job opportunities.

Kendall said three other major industrial areas had been classified as having "moderate" labor surplus. These are Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro-High Point.
