Fish Out Of Water

WALTERS, Okla. (AP) — The oldtimers here swear the drought is so bad the fish are trying to get caught to get out of the hot and drying streams. Game Ranger Woody Wilson says the streams are so low that fish are dying from lack of oxygen and also scalding to death.

New Artist Mart Encourages Capital Painters, Sculptors

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON — It was an enthusiastic Gwen Anderson who came from her home in nearby Falls Church, Va., to take her turn presiding over the Artists' Mart, of which she is one of the eight operative members.

"The success we've had this summer has been fabulous and shows Washington has indeed become art conscious," she said. "We've sold many paintings, sculpture and other works, not only our own but of numerous other young artists. We've been asked to exhibit in shows. Some of us have won awards."

Mrs. Anderson, wife of a Defense Department engineer and a realistic water-colorist and enamel artist herself, had just won an award at the Museum of Natural History for an elongated 64-inch "El Greco-ish" figure in enamel.

Mrs. Anderson is a relative newcomer to the Mart group, which held its first meeting in 1951 under a fig tree in a Georgetown garden to plan a cooperative, with members sharing profits and responsibilities, and provide a "convenient, informal outlet" for the work of Washington artists.

"The Mart gives the young artists a chance to show their work in nice surroundings and encourages them," Mrs. Anderson said. "As a result some of them have been enormously successful. The artists who have their work on consignment with us—we have more than 150—have time and again expressed appreciation that their work can be seen at so convenient a counter the year around. Many have stated that the Mart was the first to sell their work."

Only one man is a member of the group of eight, which represents painters, sculptors, potters, textile and jewelry designers. He is versatile Gustav Trois, who has won more than 50 prizes for his work in oils, water color, etchings, woodblocks and so on.

"While there is a great demand for small articles such as jewelry, ceramics, prints and watercolors selling for less than $25," Mrs. Anderson said, "it has been gratifying to discover that the buying public is looking also for larger items."
