Markets & Trades

Larger markets for Southern farm and ranch products will result from last week's action of the Oklahoma Legislature in exempting margarine made from domestic products from a 10c tax, in the opinion of A. L. Ward, Educational Service Director of the National Cottonseed Products Association.

"With the signing of this bill by the Governor, Oklahoma will join other Southern States in constructive legislation aiding cotton growers, soybean producers, cattle men and other farmers who find in margarine a large market for their products", Ward commented. Oklahoma's house of Representatives and Senate have passed a bill by Senator John A. McDonald which exempts margarine, containing only domestic fats and oils, from a tax of 10c a pound. Most Southern States have similar laws to give preference to producers of American fat and oils used in margarine.

More than 108,000,000 pounds of cottonseed oil, alone, were used by the margarine industry last year in addition to 14,282,000 pounds of soybean oil and large amounts of beef fats and other American fats and oils, Bureau of Census statistics show.

Increasing use of American products in margarine gives Southern farmers and ranchmen larger and more diversified markets for some of their most important cash crops, Ward pointed out.

"A much greater expansion of this market can be expected when tax and laws which now hamper the sale of margarine in certain states, as well as nationally, are amended as Oklahoma has done", he continued. "Leading farm and ranch organizations, as well as business and industry groups, are actively supporting their fight to nullify existing legislation in the American market and give their fat and oil, this production work in Oklahoma and other States. This program gives American products preference over imported products.
