Family With Four Wage Earners Instead of One, Figure It Out Themselves

This picture typifies millions of American families who have been the sole support of their families. This mother is noted monthly has received the highest wages in the business, and is investing 10% of his income in War Bonds.

For several months now, however, his wife, who also represents some 10 million women in war work, has been employed in a well paid job greatly increasing the family income, while the overhead cost of living has remained almost static.

To add to this family income another member of the family, a sister and aunt, has also obtained employment in a war industry which manufactures parachutes. Her addition to the family income more than doubles the original one-man income.

The daughter now gives the family 4 wage earners instead of one. She is employed regularly as an elevator operator, her wage adding to the family income where only 10% of the 200% total increase goes into War Bonds.

Here the family group is shown figuring out themselves how much more of their increased family income they can put into War Bonds. It can very easily be 15 to 20% of the total income. Typical American families everywhere are figuring it out for themselves.
