Machinery For Increased Food

The food production goal announced for 1944 is the highest on record. It calls for the largest planting program in the nation's history -- the planting of 380,000 acres, an increase of 16,000,000 acres over 1943.

"This vast production program will require the efficient utilization of machinery in planting, cultivating, and harvesting the farm products needed," says J. D. Blicke, Extension agricultural engineer at State College.

Although more new machinery probably will not be sufficient to meet the increased crop acreage and for replacement of worn equipment. This means that it is highly essential to have every usable machine now on the farms properly repaired and maintained for use in 1944.

Canning

A recent poll shows that 75 percent of the people canned an average of 165 jars or cans of food last year.
