IT'S SMART TO BE SAVING

Save everything these days; time, effort, materials. It's not only worthy, it's smart, what with limited supplies of all kinds, lack of help and mounting taxes.

There are so many things a clever housekeeper can do to cut down work and costs. Plan simpler meals, for one thing. Lots of two-dish dinners bolstered up with a good hearty beverage like beer and a ready-made dessert of fresh fruit. Set your table more simply, too, with easy-to-launder place mats instead of table cloths. When you can, cook and serve in the same dish. This not only saves dish washing, it helps keep foods hot longer. Otherwise, why not skip serving dishes altogether and fill the plates in the kitchen? The children, or a helpful guest can carry them in to the table as fast as you get them filled.

A big washable tray will help you set your table with a minimum of trips to the kitchen and if you have a serving table or old-fashioned tea cart near the dining table you can bring your dessert and beverage in with the rest of the meal, and then when the time comes just reach for them.

Plan a week's meals at one time, make out a careful buying list and do as much of a week's marketing as you can on one day. Get all of your staples that day—your crackers, cheese, salad oil, grapefruit, coffee, beer, and the like. Then all you have to do the rest of the week is buy green vegetables and meat. It pays to plan and the woman who organizes her housework has more time for war work, recreation and her family, more precious now than ever before.

Plan your budget carefully, too, so that you can keep on buying war bonds as long as Uncle Sam has them for sale!
