Friday And Saturday Are Circus Days In Kenansville and Beulaville

Beers-Barnes Circus Plays in Kenansville Friday and Ben-laville Saturday; Tents go Near White Schoolhouse Near here,

What the advance manager o the Beers-Barnes Circus calls two of the outstanding acts of all times are those of Chubbie and Alice.

Chubble is billed as the Beau with the Human Brain, and Alice they call her big Alice, because she's the largest performing elephant on the road. Chubbie does all but talk, and his trainer and master says he can just about do that. Like all bears, he is a natural born boxer, and also a natural born dancer, but he puts science into his boxing, and swing zing into his dancing. "And 1 believe he thinks in words," said a representative of words," said a representative of the historic Beers-Barnes outfit, "just like you and me," as he showed a picture of Chubbie hobnobbing with one of the circus family just as any human friend would do. road

"Alice you have to see to appreciate," the circus man said. "You can't help seeing the lady, because she is big as all out-of-doors; but what the Beers-Barnes audience appreciates is her ability to do anything that any other elephant has ever done in a public performance, and more. When a real cowboy band, but present singers, whip crackers, rope spinners, and dancing cow-rope spinners, and thythm. Sgt. Rom Alphin, Paratrooper In Invasion of Normandy; Wounded in Ankle; Now Recuperating.

Sergeant Rom Alphin, 25, of Beulaville, an infantry paratrooper has been awarded the Purpl Heart at a U. S. Army hospital in England for a bullet wound he suscuperating. He was in France for less than a week before he became a casual-ty, but he and his squad of 11 men made their presence felt.

Parachuting into Normandy in Parachuting into Normandy is the early hours of D-Day, they re-mained in hiding until daylight. Their first mission was a Ger-man ordnance shop in a small village. The paratroopers swept in, firing all sorts of weapons, and cleared out the Germans and their equipment in a matter of minutes, losing only two of their men in the process. Later that same day, a German motor convoy, including first two trucks afire, and forced the Germans to flee from the others. The trucks, loaded with ammunition, blew up and their crews, numbering about 70 men, met the paratroopers' concentra-ted fire when they attempted to escape, leaving 40 of their number dead. The remainder took refuge in a house.

Alphin, who besides taking part in the action also had bagged a stray sniper with four carbine shots, led a detail in setting the house on fire. The paratroopers ranged themselves around the ranged themselves around the house and shot down the Germans as they came out, "Everytime a head popped up, it was met by at least 30 shots," Alphin said. Finally, those left inside the house signified their desire to surrender, and the paratroopers per-mitted them to come out and give up. Later the detachment was called upon to assist in the drive on Car-entan. In the suburbs of the town, machine-gun fire pinned down the advance elements including the paratroopers, and a sniper in a tree clipped Alphin with a machine pistol bullet. He crawled to safety through 300 yards of terrain exposed to machine-gun fire, until he reached medics who carried him to an aid station. Officially, Alphin was a mortar sergeant, but the unit lost lis mortars on the second day, and he became a combat patrol sergeant. Alphin's wife, Mrs. Lura Alphin lives in Beulaville.
