Famed Carolina's Born 100th. Division Is Now Seeing Combat Duty; Southern End French Front

WITH THE 100th DIVISION of the Seventh Army in France — Carolina's born and raised 100th Infantry Division has recently entered combat at the southern end of the French front alongside other organizations of Sixth Corps and Seventh Army in the Vosges Mountains. Headquarters at Seventh Army has announced.

Residents of both North and South Carolina are intimate with the training and special activities in which the Century Division engaged during the two years it was stationed at Ft. Jackson, S. C., and Ft. Bragg, N. C. The Division left Ft. Bragg late in September to come to this combat area where it is now slugging its way through some of the toughest terrain in the western front. Receiving its baptism of fire in dense woods, steep hills, mud and cold, the Century already numbers the important towns of Raon l'Etape, St. Remy, Thilaville, Le Neuveville, and Moyenviller on its list of captured cities.

America's 100th Division first became known in Columbia, S. C., where the Century was activated at Ft. Jackson, on November 15, 1942. At formal ceremonies division commander Maj. Gen. Withers A. Byrress, of Richmond, Va., accepted the organization's colors, while Maj. Gen. William H. Simpson, then XII Corps commander and now heading the Ninth Army, called on the 100th for "success in battle."

Shortly thereafter, brand-new citizen-soldiers-to-be flowed into the division from the entire eastern seaboard, and training began on Jackson's sandy terrain. Following the pattern of combat preparation prescribed by the War Department, the Messrs. Jones began the process of conversion to Pvt. under the tutelage of Regular Army, Candidate School, and Reserve officers, plus the cadre nucleus of non-commissioned officers from the 76 Division.

High-lighting the special activities while at Ft. Jackson was the 100th's participation in the Columbia All-Servicemen's Baseball League, the first held in the city and one of the few in the country. At the conclusion of the six-week circuit, the 100th placed second only to the strong Shaw Field team, while nosing out its persistent neighbor-rival, the 106th Division.

Among a host of other doings which wedged between heavy training at Jackson, the 100th also found time to stage and present "The Eve of St. Mark," Maxwell Anderson's hit play of the current war. Put on first at Jackson, it also was staged twice in Columbia's Town Theatre.

In November of 1943, the Century left the Carolinas for two months maneuver in Tennessee, but returned to their southern area home in early January when the organization moved to Ft. Bragg, N. C. While continuing its training there, the 100th was called upon to demonstrate on a number of occasions the action of a regimental combat team in attack a important guests observed.

Among those seeing the live-ammunition withering assault, now in demonstration under other observation, were Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson; Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson; Asstant Secretary of War John J. McCloy; publishers and editors of leading American news periodicals and members of Allied press corps in the States.

Leading cotton manufacturers from all over North Carolina also saw the 100th in this combined attack late last summer when industry chiefs became "soldiers-for-a-day" during a three day visit of the 100th.

North Carolinians witnessed the Century in formation during the week of June 15 when the nation's first Infantry Day was celebrated and the Fifth War Loan Drive launched. While a composite Infantry battalion was in New York City marching on the same day, units of the 100th marched in Fayetteville, Wilson and Clinton.
